The secret world of the writer

So as I look at this book, it is impossible for me to recognize its author. Profound topics, God, soul, man, good or evil and answers to the great questions and problems of life. Where were all these, and how did they meet him unexpectedly and made him their tool to reveal themselves? What is his life and how did it evolve to produce this book?

1950s. After the great war and the civil strife, the author finishes the First High School for Boys in Athens and in 1956, after very difficult entrance exams, enters the Athens Technical University, School of Civil Engineering, an achievement for that time...!

1960s. Time flies. He finishes the Polytechnic University in 61 and enters the struggle of life. And then on July 21, 1969, when Neil Armstrong set foot on the Moon, he had the inspiration to shoot, on a remote coast of Euboea, a film, "DIASPASI" (the "Division"), which completely changed his life. It was then that he found out the true nature of man, as a result of which he fully understood that if man is not "good and kind", political and economic systems, no matter how good they are, cannot be implemented and eventually collapse.. So, he turned from the outside to the inside, to himself, to investigate the "being" of man and to understand why the essence of the soul moves, during life, towards "good" or, "evil" and thus lay the first foundations of his study of free will. He expressed this in 1970 with his film "Requiem for Humanity", which describes the destructive human nature, in contrast to the purity of young children, and which 44 years later, in 2014, was ranked among the 21 classic films of art cinema of all time, at the international film festival of DUCTAC (Dubai Community Theater and Arts Centre)!

The 1970s, the era of the "flower children" but also of the restoration of Democracy in Greece, with the events of the Polytechnic University and not only... He lived this heroic era vividly, but he had already started to deal with the research of Science and its findings on the great issues of the creation of the Universe and the emergence of rational life, i.e. man.

1980s, 1990s and the first years of the 2000s. Now a successful scientist, Civil Engineer, progressing to the highest public positions, in Greek and international organizations. Also distinguished director in the short film and the documentary, in many Greek and international festivals, such as the festivals of Thessaloniki, Cannes, London, Malta, and even Donetsk, Ukraine. Photographer, pioneer in 3D and spherical imaging, he is a Champion (GuruShots photo website), with participation of his photos in numerous international exhibitions, such as those in New York, Stockholm, Lisbon, Dublin, Hanoi, Seoul, Melbourne, Barcelona, Budapest and Athens. Nevertheless, he finds time - he has been in retirement since 1996 - and he follows all the new theories of Science in the emerging quantum state of the soul and the latest discoveries about the primary Big Bang and the Higgs Boson, the so-called "the particle of God".

And it arrived in 2020 that the loss of his beloved wife of more than 50 years and his bad psychological condition as a result, as well as the dissatisfaction he felt, due to the ingratitude and indifference of some people to his person, repeatedly benefited by him, led him to decide to engage and investigate the immeasurable depth of the human soul.. So he collected the material he had already found, searching a lifetime, regarding the researches of the Science on the creation of the Universe, the dual nature of man and the essence of the soul, grouped together all his articles that he authored or collected from the web and formed the canvas of presenting his ideas.

Thus arose, as if by a miracle someone else guided the author's hand, the "STONE HEARTS", the petrified human senses, unable to recognize in the mirror their nature and realize their condition, so as to escape from the walls they have built around themselves.. It is the book that essentially appeals to the readers' intelligence, in order to comprehend and transcend their ego, so that they can change themselves and be reborn in a different world, brighter and more peaceful, and accept this world as something natural, just as we accept sunlight and rain and equally enjoy both, because they constitute Nature, which is given, and we only guard against its heatwaves and lightning strikes..!

They are the "STONE HEARTS" with thoughts on the important issues of life, which the author shares with his fellow human beings. Thoughts that will lead the reader to see the author as an extension of himself, since they share the same or similar problems and will make a hearty "handshake " with him, as if meeting an old friend!

PREFACE

Have you ever wondered how such a beautiful world was created around us, with order and harmony, and how lifeless matter came to life, gained consciousness of existence, and created a being, humans, so that someone could know that the Universe exists? And yet, this is the ancient question of philosophers and thinkers from all over the world, regarding the existence of a Creator God, soul, and free will in humans.

In this question, an answer is provided to the reader, not through philosophical beliefs or religious convictions, but through scientific evidence for the established indications of the existence of the Creator of the Universe. For this purpose, the entire scientific progress of the 20th century is presented, which overturned the prevailing perception that the Universe is eternal and proved, on the contrary, that it has a beginning, a point zero of the Big Bang, where everything came into existence from nothingness.

Subsequently, the new theories formulated about the quantum nature of the soul are presented, and therefore, the indication of its existence, as well as the unexplainable phenomena related to life after death.

Finally, the reader is called upon to transcend all the engrained philosophical and religious beliefs within them. To evaluate only the existing scientific findings and theories, in order to clarify the matter of the existence of God, soul, and free will, definitively and irreversibly. In this way, they will be able to create a solid philosophy of life, objectively true, which will help them psychologically navigate the rest of their life with confidence and certainty of correctness!

Furthermore, the characteristics of toxic and negative individuals are further described in order to assist the reader in recognizing them in a timely manner and indicating ways of dealing with them. The importance of seeking kindness and altruistic behavior towards those around us is highlighted, despite the resistance and difficulties we may encounter.

Finally, what great scientists from all eras have said about God is presented, including some who have declared themselves atheists, thus providing a more comprehensive picture of the ongoing discussion in the scientific and philosophical realm regarding the existence of God.

This book is dedicated to the memory of my wife, Filareti Leftherioti, who embodied kindness! We lived together for 54 years and helped everyone around us, even tolerating those who, due to greed, lived off us without remorse.

The effort I am making now is to continue our shared work, conveying to everyone the distilled essence of my life, so that we can confront and overcome the problems of our lives in the best possible way..!

Therefore, in this book, we are called upon to evaluate and revise our philosophical beliefs, relying on scientific knowledge and our experience, with the aim of forming a philosophy of life based on the recognition of interdependence among all beings. Consequently, by acknowledging that we are part of a broader ecosystem and that our actions and choices affect ourselves and others, we can create an environment of mutual cooperation and humanity.

Through this process of revisiting and reshaping our beliefs, we can discover new sources of inspiration and meaning. We can uncover the beauty and value of connectivity and love, which unite us with the world around us.

It is worth dedicating our lives to shaping a philosophy of life rooted in love, gratitude, and solidarity. In this way, we can positively influence ourselves, others, and the entire world, creating an atmosphere of mutual well-being.

Let's seek unity and solidarity, let's act with love and gratitude, and let's shape ourselves and society towards a world that reflects the principles of justice, freedom, and solidarity.

Let's be strong voices in a world that needs hope and sensitivity. Let's stand as examples of positive change and draw inspiration from each other. Let's join forces to promote equality and selflessness and to support those in need.

Ultimately, the challenge we face is to find the essence and meaning of our lives. Let's explore our inner reality and strive for harmony between ourselves and those around us. Through connection and empathy, we can uncover the truth that shapes our existence and contribute to creating a more humane and joyful world.

Let's be lights in the darkness, hope in despair, and love in the surrounding world. Let's embrace humanity with compassion and create a community that reflects dignity and solidarity.

Let's never forget that life is a gift, an opportunity given to us to discover the essence of "being." Let's embrace the mystical beauty of Creation and offer our best selves in our journey.

Let's write our own story with letters of dreams and hopes, discovering new dimensions of ourselves and human existence.

Let's live with passion and determination, allowing our visionary prospects to guide us. Let's believe in the power of positive "thinking," promoting hope and optimism.

Let's continue building a world that is better than the one we found, regardless of race, nationality, or political beliefs. Let's be the change we want to see around us!

Let's contemplate the divine and draw strength from it.

Faith can provide strength and guidance to people. Let's accept something greater than ourselves to gain hope, optimism, and a sense that there is something beyond our limited human powers and understanding. This acceptance can provide courage and encouragement in difficult times and strengthen human resilience. It can help us find inner peace, harmony, and a sense of unity with the world around us. By seeking the divine and trusting in its power, we can free ourselves from fear, insecurity, and our worries, finding a deeper meaning and purpose in our lives.

Let's study the very serious indications provided by science that there is a Creator, such as the Big Bang that created the Universe, the Higgs boson or "God particle" that converted energy into matter and created everything, the creation of the first cell and thus life, the fact that matter gained consciousness of existence and created humans, and much more!

Moreover, for many people, science and religion are not contradictory approaches but complementary. Scientific discoveries can reveal the complexity and beauty of the Universe, while religious faith can offer a framework of meaning and values for human existence. Each person has the freedom to choose the approach they find most reliable and suitable for themselves.

Each individual can analyze and evaluate the evidence and information provided by science and extensively presented in "STONE HEARTS" to shape their own beliefs and approaches to the existence or non-existence of a Creator of the Universe.

Regarding the topic of the soul, the millions of near-death experiences where people, briefly clinically dead, some of whom were congenitally blind, had full awareness of existence and "saw" during their experience, indicate that human consciousness likely survives after death, suggesting the existence of a soul.

It's important to note that the scientific community maintains a controversial view on the nature and interpretation of these incidents, and their study has continued for the past 50 years. The profound impact these experiences have on people who go through them has captured the interest of scientists and the general public alike.

These experiences provide serious indications and raise questions about the nature of human consciousness, mortality, and the existence of a possible supernatural or spiritual element.

All the above are elaborated on and developed in detail in the book you're holding in your hands, dear reader. I wish you good reading with patience and persistence, for a new beginning in your life!

Furthermore, the chapters contain comprehensive perspectives on the topic, which can be read randomly by simply flipping through the book. You don't need to know what preceded to understand their meaning!

Brain and Mind

By the term "mind", we mean the separate entity or, the function of the brain that programs it. It is clarified that the term "mind" includes all related terms: mind, soul, consciousness, self, etc.

The study of the brain by science usually begins with the admission that everything happens exclusively from this organ and that the "mind" is a function of it that exists only when the brain is awake. It is the theory of "monism". But because there are qualities of the "mind" that cannot be interpreted exclusively by the functioning of the brain alone, how, for example, something material can produce something non-material, such as mental activity, the theory of "dualism" arose, that the "mind" is an independent, non-material entity, of a completely different nature from the brain.

In both cases, the question arises, where does the "mind" get the energy to function and what is the nature of this energy?

We know that the brain works by transmitting information between its neurons, through electrochemical impulses. The brain's source of energy is carbohydrates, mainly glucose. So in the case of "monism", the "mind", as a function of the brain, should use the same energy. However, in the case of "dualism", there are phenomena of the functioning of the "mind" which cannot be derived from the functioning of the glucose energy of the brain. And these are telepathy, that is, the transfer of thought from "mind" to "mind" independently of the distance between them, telekinesis, or psychokinesis and levitation, phenomena proven to exist.

Thought transmission, means the transmission of images through an unknown form of energy, which the "mind" operates and which energy is transferred from "mind" to "mind". Telekinesis means the movement of objects through this energy and levitation means the momentary or permanent lifting of the body, following the strong will and "faith" of the one who performs the telekinesis and levitation.

Telekinesis and levitation give us information about the type of energy that feeds the "mind", which should be directly related to gravity, since it can neutralize it and move objects, or lift the body.

All this advocates, in favor of the theory of dualism and the existence of a separate entity, (mind, soul, etc.), which programs the brain, powered by energy of an unknown form and not by the above-mentioned brain functioning energy from glucose . And since this energy is external and not coming from the brain, then this entity, (mind, soul), which programs the brain, is possible to survive after death.

At this point, a clarification should be made about the concept of "programming" the brain by the "mind".

By this term we do not mean the instinctive, automatic programming of the brain of the beings of the entire animal kingdom, which is done, by the blind natural laws of operation of this organ, through its neurons, based on its inscribed instincts and of the random configuration from the environment and its repeated "habits", which aim to save energy and automate operation of. That is, man constantly tends to repeat himself.

On the contrary, we mean the logical programming of the brain, due to the " free will " of the " mind ", which usually opposes and changes the instinctive programming and which logical programming is the basic characteristic of human " freedom " and the great mystery of logic life that appeared in the Universe..!

Finally, regarding the similarity of " mind " energy with gravity, which is one of the four forces of the Universe, Gravitational, Weak Nuclear, Electromagnetic, and Strong Nuclear, which Physicists are now trying to unify into one, it is probably the energy of the " mind » to come from this unknown unified force, which unites everything in the Universe and which mysteriously acquired consciousness of existence and free will, with the appearance of man. Similarly, it is not excluded that it is even the quantized energy that is found everywhere in the Universe, traces of vibrations of which Science has begun to detect now in the microtubules of the brain. As is well known, quantized energy is found in subatomic particles, which also have wave behavior, with the well-known example of light whose microparticles (photons), in addition to their material nature, also behave as waves, i.e. they are simultaneously matter and energy (see the video mentioned in the Bibliography). This quality was shown in 2013 to extend to the brain, confirming the existence of " quantum " energy in the one that, unknown how, in humans, extended consciousness of existence, logic and free will (Soul)!

And it now depends on the religious beliefs that one has, to interpret this fact, calling this unknown force that overwhelms the Universe, " Love ". And here we recall the Biblical saying: " God is Love ", that is, everything in the Universe is governed by this unknown unifying force, " Love ".

And the other saying, "man is the image of God", that is, the primary consciousness of existence, God, transferred through "Love", the consciousness of His existence to man, with its properties:

God Creator - Man Creator!

On the Creation of the Universe and on the Soul

Cause and Effect

In both of these fields, amazing discoveries have been made in recent years, which give many clues to the existence of a Creator of the Universe and a soul in man.

It was in 1929, that the discovery by the great American Astronomer Edwin Hubble (1889-1953), from the Mount Wilson Observatory in S. California, that galaxies are moving away from each other, meant that in their distant past, they had a common point start, with a cosmic explosion, a theory that had already been formulated. in 1927 by Georges Lemaître (p. 37).

The Big Bang changed our perception of the Universe from eternal and anarchic to finite and created some 14 billion years ago. It was then that all the energy of the Universe was created, from which both matter and its physical Laws emerged, which didn't exist before, because 'before,' there was no matter!

Furthermore, the initial energy of the Big Bang, as it resulted from the event of the Great Explosion, is not infinite and eternal. Therefore, it must have originated from something that existed prior, according to the Principle of "Cause" and "Effect" (effect being the result of a cause). In other words, there is no "cause" without an "effect," and vice versa, no "effect" without a "cause." This "something," which is the "cause" of the creation of the Universe, the Universe being the "effect," must consist of energy and substance of unknown composition. This substance "emits" energy and cannot be studied as it is not governed by any Natural Law. It is simple, without internal conflicting forces, unbounded, immeasurable, and timeless, thus infinite and eternal, (see p. 91 and EPILOGUE p. 257). Regardless of the name we give it (God, Cause, primordial state, supersymmetry, or anything else), what's certain is that it EXISTS . As long as we have the "effect" (the created Universe), we must also have the "cause" (this "something" that must have existed before the Big Bang, resulting in the "effect"). "Cause" and "Effect" always coexist; it is not possible for one to exist without the other. This is a logical error if accepted.

On the other hand, we know that everything that exists and is happening today in the Universe, and above all the appearance of rational life, i.e. man who has logic and consciousness of existence, "goes back to then" , that is, to the beginning of the Big Bang, when it appeared suddenly and from the nothing, all the energy of the Universe, which energy contained, from its first moment, "a potential state, from which came everything that exists today..!"

From this, the 'Human Principle' was formulated for interpreting the creation of the Universe, given that the appearance of humans, which constitutes the greatest mystery of Creation, is linked and potentially contained in the primordial moment of the Big Bang! In other words, within the initial energy that originated from the Big Bang, the presence of humans was also imprinted. In essence, the initial laws of the Universe's evolution contained the necessary constants for the later emergence of carbon-based life forms, accompanied by the essential information for their proper multiplication and the creation of rational life on the planet! (Professor and Academician Loukas Christoforou, interview with ERT 3/6/2011, see pp. 9, 39, 128, 251 and Bibliography).

This was followed by the confirmation of the existence of the Higgs Boson or, as it has been called the "God Particle" (see also the next chapter), whose perfectly regulated size of the values of its field, in order to achieve the creation of matter and the Universe, surprised astrophysicists, causing them to begin to accept the existence of a Creator. The Higgs field is likened to a thick sea in which all the particles "swim". Depending on the way in which the various particles "swim".» within this field, they take the given mass of their species. If this field did not exist, the creation of mass and matter would not be possible and therefore there would be no Universe, only energy. The existence of the Higgs particle was predicted in 1964 by the English Physicist Peter Higgs, from which it obtained his name.

For the detection and discovery of the Higgs particle, the LHC accelerator of CERN was used and it was done by two experimental groups of 3,000 people. They were the CMS and ATLAS teams. A team from the Aristotle University of Thessaloniki also participated in the ATLAS experiment and in fact from the total area of 5,500 sq.m. that the detectors of this experiment cover, the 550 sq.m. were manufactured by Aristotle University of Thessaloniki (GREECE).
(Information from <https://grdiscovery.com/>)

And finally the medical finding from many scientifically verified testimonies of near-death experiences, where people, even those born blind, such as Vicki Noratuk who was briefly clinically dead, saw and accurately described scenes that they could not have known, because of their condition but also of their brain's inability to provide visual information, show that self-consciousness, thought and memory, continue to exist after the brain has stopped functioning and therefore brain and mind are not the same, but they are distinct entities, which leads to the conclusion of existence of soul.

(see SELF p. 91, EPILOGUE p. 257 and LIFE AFTER DEATH p. 156)

All three of these are very interesting scientific findings that enlighten us and lead us to the correct formation of our personal worldview, with what this entails for our everyday life and the way we face our lives.

Our point of view on rational life and man now takes on another dimension, because if man did not exist, the Universe would not exist either, because "only man knows that the Universe exists!" The " Man ", the " upper -eared man ", the one who raises his face and eyes upwards!

The "Man", the one who lifts the face and eyes, upwards!

On the Creation of the Universe
How did the " Big Bang " that created the Universe, happen?

The work of Science according to Loukas Christophoros distinguished Scientist, Professor and Academician

Werner Karl Heisenberg

To the great question of astrophysicists and not only, from " where ", the " Big Bang " arose and if it was a random event, the principle of Heisenberg's Indeterminacy (or Uncertainty) could perhaps provide an answer (Nobel Prize 1932 for the foundation of Quantum Mechanics), whose application is the quantum oscillation of zero, because it predicts the random appearance of particles in a vacuum, out of nowhere (Edward Tryon's 1973 theory of vacuum quantum fluctuations), which, if it is true, simply shifts the problem of Creation backwards. But before the " Big Bang ", there was "nothing known today".

(about the quantum theory see also pp. 69, 74, and 78).

Moreover, it was recently discovered (4/7/2012), by the Large Hadron Collider (CERN), the Higgs Boson, the so-called "God particle", whose carrier Higgs field is 10,000 trillion times weaker from its maximum value. This value is critical because if it were slightly different, there would be no physical structure in the Universe. And it is incomprehensible why it has this perfectly regulated size, which if it deviated a little, the creation of matter and therefore the Universe would not be possible. This is something completely inexplicable, and wonderful for Astrophysics and Cosmology and has as a consequence many astrophysicists, aligning themselves with the Biblical position, exclude random creation and introduce the concept of the existence of a Higher Plan of Creation of the Universe, expressed as the " Human Principle ". This Principle explains the reasons why the Universe was created and has the age and those fundamental Physical Constants necessary to accommodate life, which has a consciousness of its existence and a free will, namely man. The terminology, " Human Principle ", was first used by Brandon Carter in 1973 in Krakow, during the symposium in honor of Copernicus and the 500th anniversary of his birth.

So, from a purely logical and philosophical standpoint, the Biblical and Scientific viewpoints are now considered equivalent and it is a matter of terminology: The former designates the pre-existing state as "God", while the latter terms it as "supersymmetry" or "primordial state", or whatever else, as the cause of creation. It is noteworthy that until the beginning of the 20th century, science believed, in complete contrast to the Biblical perspective, that the Universe had no beginning and was eternal, stable, and unchanging. But in 1927, the monk and astronomer Georges Lemaitre, expressed the idea of a changing Universe created from a "primordial atom", and it's Fred Hoyle, who, for the first time, in a BBC radio broadcast in 1950, provided the term "Big Bang" for the primordial cosmic explosion.

The "Big Bang" was confirmed experimentally, when in 1965 the physicists Arno Penzias and Robert Wilson (received the Nobel Prize in Physics in 1978), captured the trace of the Explosion, which is emitted to this day, when. observed a short-wavelength (microwave), diffuse, and. isotropic electromagnetic radiation, that came uniformly from all directions. It should be noted that the existence of this diffuse and isotropic radiation had been predicted since 1948 by George Gamow.

Thus ended the controversy about the Universe, between the Biblical and Scientific views, with the complete predominance of the first:

"the Universe was Created and is not without beginning!"

And as the world-renowned Physicist, Academic and said:

"Take the people who gave their lives and gave us many things in religion, the Prophets, Apostles, Saints, take anyone you want and put them all together and tell me, how beautifully they describe what they conceive of the divine.

About soul

The question we must answer, secretly, to ourselves, honestly and sincerely:

Hitler was responsible for killing 6 million people, Yes or No?

Is there free will and autonomy? Are we responsible for our actions, good or bad? Are criminals responsible for their actions?

If we accept the materialistic physico-chemical theories, that the will of man arises out of blind necessity, from purely mechanical processes, which take place in the brain and is subject exclusively to the physical and chemical laws, which blindly direct it, then the answer is, " No " and we don't have responsibility for what we decide and do, so criminals don't have responsibility for their actions either.

But if we accept the obvious of our daily experience, that free will and change of mind is the common experience of all men, and that at any moment we can direct our actions according to our desire, then the answer is, " YES ", which means that the human machine is guided by something external, independent of its construction and the natural laws of its operation based on blind necessity, that is, it is guided by the soul, which has free will and at all times, expresses itself with the word "EGO" ("I").

This relationship between brain and soul can be likened to the relationship between radio and radio waves, i.e., just as the radio itself is not the source of the broadcasts it transmits, but reproduces them through the information carried by the radio waves of the outside station, the brain too, is not the source of the soul's information, but the one that expresses them . And if one is destroyed, the radio or the brain, it does not mean that the other, the radio waves or the soul, is destroyed too !

Also, the relationship between the brain (which is a physical computer) and the soul can be likened to the relationship between a computer and its operator, who, using the machine, makes decisions about his problems, expressing his free will. And of course if the computer is destroyed, its operator still exists, but without being able to express his will and decide on the issues that concern him. So if, for example, our cell phone (our brain, our body), with its map and GPS navigation system, is destroyed, we (the operator, the soul), who use it, still exist, we simply cannot realize our will and go to our destination..

Therefore we have to choose between having a soul and free will and not having one, removing the concept of our freedom in the decisions of our actions.

After giving this answer, each one of us must honestly discover what the existence or absence of the soul means for humans, and consequently for God, and what fundamental changes one should make to his 'beliefs'..!

God, Soul, Free Will

George Paxinos

In an interview with the Athens and Macedonian News Agency, leading Greek neuroscientist Professor George Paxinos, who resides and works in Australia as the head of a research center, declared himself an atheist and publicly supports the notion that there is no free will or soul in humans.

" Mind is the energy of neurons. And like the Hellenic Parliament, each neuron has its say and someone wins in the end. In the co-emotional field, e.g. in love, there is no free will. You cannot direct your emotions with your will. For other matters, beyond co-emotions, it is more difficult to prove that free will also does not exist. You think that you decide to go see this movie and not the other, but in reality, your brain has already decided and is letting you know. Your decisions are a matter of neurons. You are but a cork, on the waves of the brain and not the wave itself ."

So without overlooking it, George Paxinos talks about two clearly separated entities, that is, on the one hand about the brain and on the other hand about " you ", who say the word "EGO" (" I ") and whose brain informs you about its decisions. About the brain waves and about the " cork " on the waves, as he describes it.

So when Science locates, in which center within the brain, this entity (clearly separated from it), is based, which has a self-consciousness of existence and says the word " EGO " ("I") or, the " cork ", as George Paxinos figuratively calls this entity , then let's accept, that there is no soul and free will. And that the one whom the brain informs about the decisions of its neurons, is a center of it, made of flesh and bones, i.e. matter and not an "energetic" entity, "immaterial" and independent of the brain and matter, i.e. completely of a different nature from it, called " soul ".

An entity, which has a consciousness of existence, expressed by the word "EGO" ("I") and free will, because it can change its mind at any time, as our experience tells us.

Because we can, and in fact many times with negative psychological consequences for ourselves, not satisfy our " desires ", which are the mechanical decisions of matter, i.e. the neurons of the brain. And we especially do this in our emotional states, love, hate, anger, etc., which the professor mentions and invokes as proof of the non-existence of free will.

An entity that can even decide to kill the body, that is, to kill itself, something that neurons would never decide to do, because it is impossible for a machine to program itself to self-destruct, unless it is guided to do so by a another entity, which operates this machine, i.e. by " you ", the soul. It is exactly, the relationship between car and driver. The driver himself will turn the steering wheel and the car will fall off the cliff and not the car itself.

So far, it is known that such a center in the brain has not been found, although large parts of it have been removed, without the patients losing consciousness of their existence.

So, I kindly request the great Greek Scientist, to avoid referring publicly to issues of human free will, because these are personal positions that each one of us has for himself.

For the idea, even if true, that man has no free will and is therefore " irresponsible " for his actions, is dangerous. And of course, everyone has every right to believe this, but when this is expressed publicly, many may interpret it as granting absolution to every criminal for their crimes and that Hitler is acquitted, for the 6 millions of our fellow human beings, he murdered in holocaust..

" You think that 'you' decide to go see this movie and not that one (or, to commit this crime and not the other one), but in fact your brain has already taken this decision and just informs you so. Your decisions are a matter of neurons .'

So it is as if the following were said to the criminal, who accepts them with joy, because not only do they offer him forgiveness for his actions, but they also give him the justification for doing them. And the same also happens with any one of us, who, because he is interested in his own interest, commits illegal, improper, or, immoral acts, against his fellow men:

" You think that you have decided to commit your crimes, but in fact your neurons have already decided and are simply informing you of their decision, and you can do nothing but obey and commit crimes, because you have no free will and therefore you are irresponsible for your actions " ..

So in two words, the above positions are summarized as follows:

- There is no God, therefore
- There is no soul, therefore
- Man has no free will and is irresponsible for his actions.

Therefore, for whatever you do in your life, whether 'good' or 'bad' deeds, you are not 'you' responsible, but rather your neurons, in other words, the 'matter'.

Conclusion:

"Don't have any regrets about what you do, it's NOT your fault!"

These can be deduced from the words of the Greek scientist, in his interview with the Athenian and Macedonian News Agency (see Bibliography) and which when said in public, regardless of whether they are correct or not, can strengthen people's irresponsibility for their actions, with all the negative effects this can have on society..

And of course another conclusion that comes from the above is that, if we follow the reverse reasoning, that is:

- man is responsible for everything he does, therefore
- man has free will, therefore
- man has a soul, therefore
- God exists,

then, checking ourselves whether we have free will and are responsible for our actions, we know directly and by personal experience, the existence of a soul and therefore of God!

It is an easy way to establish our relationship with the "divine", every day, and to avoid the ephemeral situations and actions in which our selfishness traps us..!

An entity, which has a consciousness of existence

The positions of Dr. Wilder Penfield, " father " of neurosurgery

On the other hand, the famous " father of modern neurosurgery ", Dr Wilder Penfield, during his career, tried to prove that the mind and consciousness originate exclusively from brain processes. But he, unlike George Paxinos, revised his initial views, due to the observations he made during operations on more than a thousand epileptic patients.

Specifically, while the patients were conscious, he stimulated with the help of electric current, some motor centers of the brain, (e.g. of the hand), thus causing the involuntary movement of the corresponding limb. At the same time, he asked the patients to block this movement, of their own volition, (e.g. using the other hand). So as the patients " struggled » against themselves, they confessed that the involuntary movement was not done by their will. In other words, they viewed themselves as an entity separate from their body, and no electrical stimulation affected the patients' perception of this or their will to believe that this movement was voluntary. Penfield ventured to explain that man possesses not only a brain, (which is material, and stimulated to cause movement), but also an immaterial reality, (mind), which interacts with the brain .

The above is described in his book, " The mystery of the mind " , in which, characteristically, he describes his following experiment, which he repeated hundreds of times, in different ways.

He created a high-tech system to monitor the brain activity of a patient who was told to perform simple movements such as raising his arm. When he raised it, a part of his brain was activated and the patient described the event with the words, "I raised my hand ." When he brought his hand down, the part of the brain seemed to turn off, and the patient described the event as, "I put my hand down . "

Then Dr. Penfield, using state-of-the-art technology, artificially activated the brain section and the arm rose. The patient described the event with the words, "My hand went up by itself . " Dr. Penfield specifically asked, "Did you raise your hand ?" The patient responded with complete certainty, "I didn't raise my arm, my arm went up by itself." When Dr. Penfield turned off the brain and the arm fell, the patient described, "My arm fell down, I didn't lower it myself" .

This simple experiment had profound implications

In both cases, the brain was activated to raise and lower the arm. In the second case, Dr. Penfield, who was an external agent, activated the brain. But what was the factor that activated it in the first case? "In both cases, the brain served as a machine for transmitting the intention of an agent ." In the second case Dr. Penfield conveyed the intention. In the first case, however,

" what was it, that conveyed the intention?" Could the mysterious agent be the soul?"

The movement of the hand, in this case, was made by the patient " of his own free will , " obeying Dr. Penfield's request to raise his hand. The, "of his own will , " is the factor that activated the brain, which moved the body and raised the hand.

So, " by his will ", could be the soul, the mind, the spirit, or whatever else we call it, but NOT the brain, " which is the engine that transmitted the movement to the hand, obeying in both cases, to the agent who gave it the order!'

Dr. Penfield, as before mentioned, had begun the investigation of the brain, with the express intention of disproving the existence of the soul, but after conducting experiments, such as the above, for forty years, he arrived at a definite conclusion,

"the brain is a computer, but programmed by something, outside of itself"

What Dr. Penfield had not proved, as he states in his book, " The Mystery of the Mind ", published in 1974, is where this separate immaterial entity, which programs the brain, and which he calls "mind", derives its energy to operate ? From the body or, from an external source, from God? That is, as he explains in the last paragraph of his book, does the " mind " survive after death, if its operating energy comes from God or, no, if it comes from the body? And of course, in 1974, the thousands of " postmortem" cases had not yet been collected and studied», the so-called NDE cases (Near Death Experiences) which give the indication that, after death, what we call soul, mind, spirit, consciousness etc. survives (see SELF p. 91 and LIFE AFTER DEATH p. 156).

These views of Dr. Penfield, arrived at, after 40 years of observations, which he had made, profoundly influenced science, and it is no coincidence that in 1973, just one year before the release of his book, the term, "Human Principle", for the creation of the Universe, had already been officially formulated by Brandon Carter in Krakow, during the symposium in honor of Copernicus and the 500th anniversary of his birth.

Note

The numerous experiments done by the famous father of modern neurosurgery, Dr. Wilder Penfield, (1891-1976), to prove that the brain is a computer, but it is programmed by something outside of itself, are cited in his book, Mystery of the Mind, A Critical Study of Consciousness and the Human Brain, by Princeton Legacy Library published in 1974 and available on the web.

"How, 1.3 kilos of meat, the brain, creates, love, hate.."

The positions of George Paxinos, on the subject of man's self-consciousness

The internationally renowned Greek neuroscientist Professor George Paxinos deals with the subject of human self-awareness.

George Paxinos, declares himself an atheist and does not accept the existence of a soul and free will in man.

He likes to refer often to Christ and His words to His crusaders, "They do not know what they are doing", as evidence of man's being shaped by his environment and his lack of free will.

Despite this, he is honest, he formulates the opening sentence of this article , namely:

"how 1.3 kilos of meat, the brain, creates love, hate.."

and he confesses, as you can see in the related video (see Bibliography), that science cannot explain the following:

How was the consciousness of existence, namely self-awareness, created in humans? Consequently,

- How does a person know that he exists and also that the universe exists?
- Who in humans speaks the word "EGO" ("I") and knows that "he" is "one" and "unique" within his body? Such a center in the brain that says "EGO" ("I"), does not exist.

Therefore it is asked, by whose free will, Longinus the Centurion, the head of Christ's crusaders, who was among them, of whom Christ said "... leave them alone father, they know not what they do ", together with two of his soldiers, changed their minds, even though the environment in which they had been shaped, weighed heavily on them, and they became Christians ! Longinos even resigned from the army and " refused!" to deny the miraculous events that took place during the crucifixion and resurrection of Christ, " who was an eyewitness!, and preferred to be beheaded for this!!!, by order of the Emperor Tiberius and was sanctified!" He is celebrated by the Orthodox Church on October 16. He is the indisputable witness of the Resurrection of Christ, because he gave his life for it and did not accept to deny the fact! So did the Apostle Paul, (he was Saul who persecuted the Christians) and Mary the Egyptian, the patroness of penitents, and the thousands of early Christians who went against their Jewish, pagan, or twelve-theistic formation, changed their minds and martyred in the Roman arenas. And all these are historical facts and that is why I mention them.

A change of mind, which Orthodoxy calls metánoia (p.114) , that is, the person goes " after the mind ", changes his mind, makes a 180 degree turn and this is NOT decided by his neurons, which are configured, as the professor rightly says, from his environment, but from his soul, which opposes this heavy shaping of neurons, but does so because it has free will.

The soul is the " captain " of the ship, the " pilot " of the plane, the " driver " of the car, the " prime minister " of the Government, as Giorgos Paxinos once mentioned, comparing the neurons to the members of the Hellenic Parliament.

That is why there is the word " Sorry ", which of course is not said by the neurons, but by the soul!

But there are other examples, the great revolutions of the peoples, the heroes who sacrifice themselves for others, all those who, with their free will, go against the establishment, even though it has shaped them.

"If these individuals weren't there to change society, then the peoples would sink into the mechanical shaping of their neurons by the environment, and nothing would change in it.

"the environment would remain unchanged and incredibly boring.."

Who is he, within man, who decides and creates, History, Culture, Art, Painting, Sculpture, Music, Literature, Poetry, Cinema, Sports, Ideas, Democracy, Charity, Love? "Who is the Creator of all these"?

the 1.3 kilos of brain meat, i.e. " Matter ", operating on the basis of blind necessity?

the " Soul " that is independent of the equine natural laws and matter and has consciousness of existence and reason, i.e. free will?

Below are some characteristic excerpts from the speech "Know thyself" by George Paxinos in 2017 in Athens (see Bibliography), which, with the sincerity and honesty that distinguishes him, do not he failed to mention them, even though they raise doubts and question marks on existing theories, including his own:

There are three great unanswered questions concerning the Universe:

- How did the Big Bang happen?
- How was the first cell created?
- How did matter acquire consciousness of existence?

"I mean, how did this table know it exists and start falling in love..etc?"

-Science will never prove that there is no soul

If the mind rules the brain, then there is freedom of will and consequently, dignity and responsibility. If conversely the brain rules the mind, then a stormy conclusion follows, there is no free will, no praise, no blame, no hell.

For 'know thyself,' it's worth knowing whether we are slaves to our genes and our environment, slaves of the past, or conversely, architects of our destiny

The best term to describe neuroscientists who study consciousness, mind and free will is " confused ", they don't know what's going on with consciousness.

For what I will tell you, most scientists embrace them, but it is possible that the minority is right. In science, almost nothing is ever proven.

(and his speech follows, see: Bibliography)

How did this table know it exists and start falling in love..?

Professor George Paxinos addresses the author of the book and talks about the criticism that has been made of his positions on human free will

I asked the distinguished Greek neuroscientist Professor George Paxinos, with whom we know each other and have excellent relations (we have mutual dear friends), to give me his views on the criticism made in this book on his positions on the lack of free will in man . He sent me the following text, which I gladly included, in a separate chapter, to honor him and to be fair to him and at the same time to give, beyond the positions of the book, a global picture, on this so serious issue.

I express my thanks to Professor George Paxinos, whom I appreciate and admire for the very serious work he is doing in the "mapping" of the brain, for his immediate response to my request, despite the heavy schedule he has at the research center he directs in Australia.

Here is the text he sent me:

Marie,

Neuroscientist who seem by en large to believe there is no free will are not more prone to kill than the religious people who believe in free will. Voltaire dealt with the problem of absence of free will and μη αφεση αμαρτιων. Voltaire (and I think he is correct) says that society has every right to imprison a murderer to (a) prevent him from killing someone else and (b) to give an example of what will happen to me if I go and kill someone (go to prison) (punishment can act as deterrent).

Marie, today more murders are committed in the name of God than in the name of the Devil. Can you say that? Just look christians being killed by muslims and Muslims killing muslims.

Your analysis and ex-cathedral statements of what is dangerous to say in pubic is not based on science but on your guess, which I think is erroneous. Remember there is no evidence those who do not believe in free will (such as Einstein, Voltaire) commit more crimes.

What Do You Think?

Think secretly and answer yourself

What do you think?

Is there a God and a soul? Is it "you", the soul, that says the word "EGO" (" I ") and with your free will guide the brain, which is a meat machine, a computer and nothing else... and therefore,

do you feel "responsible to God", for the evil deeds you do for your own benefit?

or,

Is there no soul, no God? That is, your brain is a meat machine, a computer without free will and without the concepts of Good, Evil, Dignity, Responsibility of Praise, Blame and Hell.. and therefore,

*do you feel "irresponsible to people" for the bad deeds you

and for you is there only obedience to the Laws and the concepts of " beneficial " and " harmful " for man, as you interpret them each time?

Because science has not yet answered the question of whether there is a God and a soul, the above two antidiabetic beliefs are of equal weight and equally acceptable, and testify to the sincerity and honesty of those who express them freely!

Intermediate faith, however, does not exist. We cannot, with ideological tricks, be on good terms both with God, meaning "there is a God and I respect Him," and with ourselves, saying "even if there is a God, there is no soul and free will, or it's not my fault if God gave me a bad soul, etc.," so that we can evade responsibility for our actions. In other words, we can't be comfortable both with God, assuming He exists, and with ourselves, for the wrongdoings we commit.

We mustn't postpone it, overcome ourselves and our personal interests, and explore all the data of Science regarding the indications for the existence or non-existence of God and soul. We need to decide which of the two opposing beliefs we agree with, making all the necessary changes that will help us continue our lives, fully psychologically prepared for all potential occurrences at any moment.

The worst option, however, is either to avoid engaging and answering, because we lack a true worldview of life based on the existing indications of Science, or for our worldview to be subjective. In other words, it becomes a false artifice solely aimed at justifying our actions and our way of life. Eventually, when we face the ultimate need of the end, without the aforementioned sincere preparation of faith, we will be overcome either by the despair of impending annihilation or by the fear of God's deception in His name.

Here we need to clarify the concept of "personal interest" for those who believe in the existence of God and soul.

Faith in God is "true" only if it is based on objective criteria, which for Christianity are life, death, and the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and is described in the Symbol of Faith. For other religions, anything written about them that supports the existence of God is valid, while it is "false" if it is based on our personal interest. In other words, if I believe in God to survive after death, go to paradise, etc., I render religions objects of exploitation and "opium of the people," as Marx characterized them in 1844.

Consequently, it is advisable to transcend ourselves, explore the indications of Science about the existence or non-existence of God, and take a clear stance on the above-mentioned matters! The issue is serious and concerns our very own life!

Free Will

Commentary on the above article, by Mrs. Irini Christinaki, Professor at the University of Athens

Faith in God, in His existence, is unfounded because otherwise it wouldn't be faith, but knowledge.

That's why the one who believes doesn't bear any burden of proof regarding the existence of God. The truth of faith exists in the extra-ontological realm, where it is questioned.

The only burden of proof that believers carry is the proof of the authenticity of their faith. A similar burden rests upon non-believers regarding the authenticity of their disbelief.

If we want to answer the question of faith, we will realize that the only thing we can answer is how genuine, authentic, and logically ungrounded we are in our inherently unfounded faith. It's not about whether or not the content of our faith resonates with the Authentic Truth.

Question: Do we have the ability to answer or not answer the question of the authenticity of our faith or disbelief? In terms of how authentic, sincere, and genuine we are in faith or disbelief, or whether we contradict, pretend, doubt?

Answer to the above question:

Yes, we have this ability.

Therefore, we have free will because we can answer the extent to which we are authentic and truthful in confessing our faith or disbelief. We can choose not to answer all the above, not because we can't answer, but because we don't want to. Everything else might eventually find a scientific explanation that challenges the notion of our freedom, but nothing and no one can challenge our freedom to ask ourselves the question of faith and ask ourselves if we want to answer now, today, tomorrow, anytime.

Unfounded faith or disbelief can only be proven through freedom, as unfounded faith or disbelief is not imposed.

All of the above is disconnected from the question of the soul and God on an ontological basis. This is the magnificence of human existence. It possesses proven free will without proof for the existence of God and soul.

Free will is timeless and knows no age

Free Will

Editing the previous article

This article of mine was inspired and includes many positions from the extensive and fully documented analysis carried out on the subject by Professor Irene Christinaki of the University of Athens.

The belief in the existence or non-existence of God is "unproven," as otherwise it wouldn't be faith but knowledge.

"Unproven" faith is the faith or disbelief in something that hasn't been scientifically proven, that is, through experimentation. It's the "true" faith or disbelief, that isn't imposed upon humans, as it isn't knowledge.

However, the above "pure" faith or disbelief of a person becomes "tainted" when their environment, habits, genes, neurons, and all the factors that influence and shape their character persuade them without their awareness, that the aforementioned faith or disbelief, is knowledge, albeit falsely. Thus, as knowledge, it becomes "imposed" on them.

When they realize that their faith or disbelief is unproven, therefore a matter of free choice, any influence and interference over them vanish. They perceive the shaping of their character by their environment, resist and reject all the "false knowledge" that had replaced their faith or disbelief, and which had been imposed upon them until then, without them being aware of it. It's their free will that exists and reveals all of this, something that can happen to every individual, as long as they desire it.

In other words, "now they have deeply realized within themselves" that what they believe or don't believe isn't proven to exist or not exist, thus it isn't knowledge, and therefore "it's not imposed upon them." They now function freely, and their will is free to choose true faith or disbelief, reevaluating their previous opinions. They become liberated from all kinds of restraints—experiences, environment, the blind laws of neurochemistry that instinctively direct the brain, the function of their genes, neurons, etc., which transform their faith into false knowledge. Inside them, only the "existing free will" remains, enabling them to always perceive the above and choose, "by their own will," their faith or disbelief!

It's inconceivable for faith or disbelief, with whatever formation, to become false knowledge if it's not realized in time...

Faith or disbelief exists because there is free will. And you experience this moment when you realize that what you believe or don't believe is unproven, as otherwise, it would be Knowledge and not Faith. You may say, "I believe that God exists or doesn't exist," but you don't say, "I believe that New York exists," rather you say, "I know that New York exists," because its existence has been proven and is, therefore, Knowledge and not Faith!

Therefore, when you understand that what you believe or don't believe is unproven to exist or not exist, at that moment, you reject all the false knowledge that had accumulated within you over the years—your environment, experiences, family, and everything else that has shaped your character up until now. All of this fades away when you see clearly the fact of unproven faith or disbelief. And then everything disappears, and you are left "alone" with the object of your faith or disbelief, and with your free will that you've allowed to function, to examine yourself and reveal all of the above. And it's at that moment you exclaim and say, "I believe" or "I don't believe." And when someone asks you "why," you respond emphatically:

"BECAUSE I WANT TO!!!"

And this "I WANT TO" is the triumph of Human Free Will!

In summary, we could say that Faith or Disbelief demonstrates the existence of Free Will in humans, because it's "unproven" and therefore a matter of "free" choice!

This is the magnificence of human existence. It has proven free will, even though there is no evidence for the existence of God.

Note

However, in science, between faith and knowledge, two more stages are interposed: the stage of "hypothesis" when there are indications of something's existence, and the stage of "theory," when mathematicians process the hypothesis and confirm it. Subsequently, experimental verification of the theory is expected to turn it into "knowledge."

Famous examples include the Big Bang, which was confirmed in 1965 by Arno Penzias and Robert Wilson, and the Higgs Boson, predicted by Peter Higgs in 1964, which was experimentally discovered on July 4, 2012, by CERN's Large Hadron Collider, and many others in the history of science.

However, regarding the existence of God, despite existing indications, the matter remains beyond the capabilities of science to prove. It will always remain an object of "unproven faith"..

Life imprinted on the Universe, by man

Soul exists within all living entities

In animals, as long as they live, there is no shaping of their souls toward "good" or "evil." Their souls are absolutely pure existence, without the knowledge of death and decay, immutable and unchanging, through which the universal attractive force, "love," is spontaneously manifested, uniting everything in the Universe and expressed in animals as attraction and sincere devotion.

The soul

it is your subjective experience that you ' exist '. It is the being that feels and lives life, it is " you "

Does the soul exist? Scientists now say, YES

A series of new scientific experiments are helping to answer this ancient spiritual and existential question.

The idea of the soul is connected to the idea of a future life and our belief in the continuation of our existence after death. Indeed, the mysteries of birth and death, the play of consciousness, dreams, and other psychic functions, such as imagination and memory, indicate the existence of a vital force, associated with life, a vital flame, which exists and independent of the body.

However, the scientific community until today did not recognize this spiritual dimension of life. They were telling us that we are only the activity of carbon and certain proteins, that we live for a while and die. And the Universe? Does it make any sense? Has everything arisen through equations, and there is no need for a soul or God? But that's where Biocentrism came in, the "theory of the Whole".", a new one full of challenges and opposed to the traditional, materialistic model of reality. But only knowledge is a prelude to wisdom and soon through worldviews, we will discover the truth. Of course, most spiritual people treat the soul emphatically as more substantial and complex than the scientific sense. It is considered the incorporeal essence of a person and is said to be immortal, transcendent and beyond material existence. But, when scientists talk about the soul

(if they talk at all), they usually do so within a materialistic context or, treating it as a poetic synonym. They believe that everything can be known about the " soul ", only by studying the functioning of the brain. In their view, the neurosciences are the only branches of scientific study that possibly understand the soul.

Traditionally, science has dismissed the soul as an object of human faith or as a psychological necessity. Indeed, a soul has never been under the electron microscope, nor in the laboratory, in a test tube. So according to current science books nothing seems to survive the human body after death.

While neuroscience has made tremendous progress and sheds light on how the brain works, we still have a subjective experience that remains mysterious.

The problem of the soul, lies right here, to the understanding of the nature of the self, to the being that feels and lives life!

But this is not just a problem for Biology and Cognitive Science, but for the whole of Western philosophy. Our current worldview, the world of objectivity and naïve realism, is beginning to show serious cracks. Of course, this does not surprise many of the philosophers and other readers for whom the works of men such as Plato, Socrates, Kant, and other great spiritual masters are preserved unchanged and continue to wonder about the relationship between Universe and man. So recently, Biocentrism and other scientific theories have begun to challenge the old materialistic physicochemical theories and ask some of the most difficult questions about life. Is there a soul out there ?

Does anything stand the test of time?

Life and consciousness are central to this new scientific view of the concepts of existence, reality, and the universe.

Despite the fact that current science textbooks are based on the belief that the world is something objective to every observer, new experiments show just the opposite. Until now we thought that life is only the activity of atoms and particles, which spin around for a moment and then dissolve into nothingness. But now we are adding new pieces to some of the most important puzzles of modern science, including the uncertainty principle and the refinement of the laws that shape the Universe.

Consider the famous two-slit experiment. When you watch a particle pass through the slits, you expect it to behave like a bullet, going through one slit or the other. But, if one observes the particle, it exhibits the behavior of a wave and can pass through both slits simultaneously. This and other experiments tell us, that there are unobservable " probability waves ", a position of the great Nobel laureate Max Born.

At the same time, experiments make it more and more clear that even simple knowledge in the mind of the researcher is enough to turn the possibility into reality.

Many scientists reject the conclusions of these experiments but a group of physicists, (Nature Communications 2011), showed that this quantum " strangeness " also occurs in humans, worldwide.

As Kant pointed out over 200 years ago, all experiences, such as the colors, sensations, and objects we perceive, are nothing more than representations in our minds. Space and time are merely tools of the mind, for the coherence of the whole. Now, to the amusement of idealists, scientists have begun to dimly recognize that these rules make existence itself possible.

The results of Quantum Physics and beyond, show that a part of the mind, the soul, is immortal and exists outside of space and time.

The soul is " impressed " by the " beautiful " and makes it immortal!

The Quantum Soul

The theory of Roger Penrose and Stuart Hameroff and Dr. Hans-Peter Dürr and Dr. Christian Helwig

Can science prove the existence of a soul?

Prominent researchers from distinguished university institutions, such as Cambridge, Princeton and Max-Planck, argue that quantum mechanics predicts a kind of afterlife.

They explain that a person can have a dual existence, physical and mental, just like subatomic particles (photons and electrons), which, in addition to particles, are also waves, that is, they are both matter and energy.

These physicists believe that the extension of this phenomenon in nature, the psychosomatic dichotomy, is possible and logical, since the macrocosm is an extension of the microcosm, which is governed by the principles of quantum mechanics.

Dr. Hans-Peter Dürr, former director of the Max Planck Institute for Physics, in Munich, explains that just as a body records all its information in its wave energy state, so the human brain works exactly as a hard disk works, connected to the internet, which initially records all the information and immediately afterwards uploads it to the " cloud ", which in this case is the quantum, energy, spiritual field.

Continuing with this analogy, the professor explains that after death, that is, after the destruction of the physical hard disk, the specific information (the totality of which he calls the soul), is not lost, but continues to be stored in the universe.

Continuing with this analogy, the professor explains that after death, that is, after the destruction of the physical hard disk, the specific information (the totality of which he calls the soul), is not lost, but continues to be stored in the universe.

Dr. Christian Hellwig, of the Department of Biophysical Chemistry at the Max-Planck Institute in Gtinttingen, discovered evidence that information in our central nervous system exhibits phase coding, which is a type of coding that allows different data to occupy the same space, at the same time . Dr. Hellwig states that this kind of data, which does not directly interact with the material world and corresponds to our thoughts and feelings, exhibits precisely the properties that distinguish the wonderful phenomena in the quantum world.

In line with the connection of human spiritual characteristics to quantum mechanics, Stuart Hammeroff, emeritus professor in the Department of Anesthesiology and Psychology and Director of the Center for Consciousness Studies at the University of Arizona, and Sir Roger Penrose, mathematician and physicist at the Institute of Mathematics at Wandham College, University of of Oxford, had, some 30 years ago (in 1996), proposed a theory, according to which, the overall function of the brain comes from quantum vibrations that take place inside the microtubules of the nerve cells of the brain (Orchestrated objective reduction or Orch OR theory, see Bibliography).

Microtubules are a basic structural element of the cytoskeleton and are found throughout the cytoplasm. These tubular formations, which can reach up to $50\mu\text{m}$ in length, play a major role in a multitude of cellular processes, such as maintaining cell structure, intracellular transport, regulating the movement of secretory vesicles and organelles, as well as the separation of chromosomes during cell division.

What the two distinguished scientists ultimately proposed to the scientific community, (which reacted with tremendous negativity), was the idea that what we call consciousness, (and Christians soul), is actually a quantum computer, made of the primordial " threads " of an indestructible creation and that the brain is nothing more than an organ that simply acts as an amplifier of this quantum, " immortal ", computer.

And when the brain is destroyed by death, the totality of the information and existence of this quantum computer, is not lost, but remains incorporated in the indestructible Universe, from which it came and of which it is an integral part.

In 2013, Anirban Bandyopadhyay's group at the National Institute of Materials Science in Tsukuba, Japan, indeed, "detected quantum vibrations inside microtubules. of human brain, verifying Hammeroff and Penrose's theory" (Bibliography) and bringing it back to the fore to the surprise of the scientific community, which was still stubbornly in denial, without proof.

This story comes in response to all those scientists, who maintain that we are only matter and that there is no soul, who are sure that, because they cannot see and cannot measure, it does not exist.

Every time the same scenario repeats itself, God reveals, "science" denies and finally, always, true Science, verifies what God, from the beginning, revealed!

Biocentrism, the theory of Robert Lanza

Scientists argue that death is not the end

The new approach to man's greatest fear is called "Biocentrism " and comes both from the field of Quantum Physics and the Theory of Parallel Universes, as well as from Einstein himself. It was proposed in 2007 by the American Robert Lanza.

According to one of the fundamental postulates of science, no form of energy is lost.

It is not created or destroyed, it just exists.

Starting from this, and given that the brain is a huge generator of energy, scientists are asked to answer what happens to this amount of energy when the brain stops working due to death. Is it possible to transfer to a parallel universe?

For researchers, the theory of parallel universes is a reality much more objective than what we consider reality, given that concepts such as space and time, fundamental to our approach to reality, do not exist as we perceive them. Whatever the brain processes and uses as information is simply a tool to comprehend a specific spacetime, a particular reality. This is evidenced by the brain's inability to grasp the existence of the cosmic infinite, as its programming only renders finite sets intelligible to it.

In a universe without space and time (with the concepts we give them), as the Universe has proven to be, the concept of death, the end, simply does not exist, experts say.

There is the experience of death, as we experience it with our specific functioning brain, but to what extent does this experience correspond to an objective reality, for which we have no tools of understanding?

Einstein himself had admitted on the occasion of the death of a friend of his, Beso:

"Beso left this strange world, just before me. But that doesn't mean anything. Humans like us, we know that the separation between past, present and future is simply a stubborn illusion."

According to the study of scientists, immortality is not a continuous existence in an endless world, because, quite simply as a concept, it dwells beyond the notion of time as we know it. In a realm outside our perceptual capability, beyond what we deem real and unreal. Just as our limited capacity exists in defining reality, so does our capacity in delineating unreality. The unreality that isn't confined by space, time, and the laws of a minuscule universe, but extends into the entirety of creation and its infinite parallel forms, much like spacetime.

Rational living on Earth, everywhere

The creation of rational life

How matter acquired a consciousness of existence

The significant unanswered question, which is purely a matter of faith, is how matter gained consciousness of existence and gave rise to logical life, including humans. Does it follow from its highest self-organization and natural selection, as predicted by the theory of evolution of species by Charles Darwin, and after countless trials conducted in multiple universes by "evolutionary" scientists? Or does it stem from intelligent design and higher intervention, as proposed by "creator scientists? This debate has emerged in recent years due to challenges to Darwin's theory of evolution, as some scientists argue that complex organs like the eye cannot function without even the slightest mechanism. Thus, they couldn't have evolved through natural selection. This issue was first raised in 1996 by Michael Behe, a Biochemistry professor at Lehigh University, with his book "Darwin's Black Box," where he coined the term "irreducible complexity." However, many scientists have labeled it as pseudoscientific principle of intelligent design, which science rejects as unverifiable through experimentation.

Nevertheless, the universe and life itself are unlikely to have come into existence on their own, randomly and by chance, with this beauty, harmony, perfection, and a logical entity that possesses consciousness of existence - humans. This suggests the presence of an observer who knows that THE UNIVERSE EXISTS!

In other words, it's implausible for these highly improbable and mysterious events in the universe, such as matter gaining self-awareness, resulting in the creation of logical life, to have occurred purely by chance.

It's akin to spreading the thousands of components of a Boeing 747 across a large plaza, having a very powerful wind blow through and assemble them into a perfect airplane, complete with a pilot in the cockpit ready to fly it - which is simply IMPOSSIBLE!

However, the aforementioned Boeing 747 argument (junkyard tornado), initially formulated by British Astronomer Fred Hoyle (see page 37) and referred to as Hoyle's fallacy, has been challenged by many who advocate for evolutionary creation. Nonetheless, nothing can alter the fact that what we observe around us is highly unlikely to have arisen "by chance" in the universe from any prior state, known or unknown (even pre-Big Bang). There will always be an "eternal beginning," where "nothing known" existed and everything must have been created by some "cause."

Furthermore, following the proven realization of the Big Bang, numerous theories have been proposed to explain it, such as the false vacuum, inflation, bubbles, and infinite universes. More theories will likely arise in the future, but they will only serve to shift the problem of the universe's or universes' creation backward, and consequently, the existence of a Creator.

THE COSMIC POEM

If hypothetically someone writes down all the letters of the alphabet on small pieces of paper, using various fonts, and in as large a number as desired (let's say 1 million), and throws them in the air, how many possibilities exist for these lettered pieces to form words of unique beauty and significance upon landing, using the same font?

How many possibilities exist for these formed words to create sentences and the sentences a poem of unparalleled structure and beauty?

How many chances are there for this poem to be governed by mathematical rules of harmony and perfection?

How likely is it that a gentle breeze, continually shuffling the letters and erasing some words, will simultaneously form new ones with the same beauty, while maintaining the poem's original meaning, harmony, and beauty?

So, if you believe there's even a slight possibility of the above happening, you might find that the age of the universe isn't enough while you strive endlessly to achieve it.

But if you believe there's not the slightest chance, begin to pray to your Creator, thanking Him for the gift of life.

The Cosmic poem: Panagiotis Nousias

Eternity

The concept of time - The proof of the existence of a soul

The concept of Time is directly related to the human's perception of its three subdivisions: the past, the present, and the future. However, this perception doesn't correspond to reality. It's the erroneous human understanding of time that Einstein famously labeled as a "stubbornly persistent illusion" when he referred to the death of his friend Besso (page 79).

For instance, consider an observer inside a moving car who sees trees passing by, in succession: first 1 tree, then 2 trees, and finally 3 trees. While the observer sees the 2 trees, the 1 tree that just passed is "the past" to him, the 2 trees they see are "the present," and the 3 trees about to come, are "the future." Yet, this impression is tied to the observer's way of perceiving events, making it inaccurate. This is because if the car's roof is removed and the horizontal field of view becomes 360 degrees, the observer will simultaneously see not only all the trees but also everything else around, making the concepts of past and future lose meaning. The notion of time will disappear. The observer will enter a timeless state characteristic of eternity.

This is the state in which the human soul exists within its quantum environment. It's a state that cannot be comprehended by human finite perception. We attempted to describe it through the above simple example, but it might only be accurately conveyed through mathematical equations.

Nonetheless, it's possible to grasp the eternity of our soul through the uniqueness of our individuality. When we reflect on memories from our childhood, we feel that the specific "self" we possess now, was the one experiencing those moments "back then"! The sense of our "self" isn't altered as time passes, giving us the certainty that the one who lived during our childhood was the same "self" we are now. Regardless of our current condition, whether we're possibly ill or elderly, we are certain that "WE, OURSELVES," regardless of age, as we feel ourselves now, lived through our childhood. Our present "self" doesn't experience aging or any change.

Therefore, this realization reveals that the "self" of a human, isn't dependent on the development of his body or brain. This means that, it is not a component of these physical aspects, like neurons or anything else bodily. It is of spiritual essence, immaterial and unchangeable.

In other words, it is proven that there exists a soul, hence God, and each one of us "can sense this", as discussed above!

Thus, the "self," which is the SOUL, is AGELESS because after its creation, it exists eternally!!!

What is Habit, Character, Creativity

We are not alive, we are dead and we don't know it

"Habit" or "Character," which is the collection of habits, is the automated functioning of the body to ease the brain's workload, preventing it from using conscious effort, which is tiresome. However, conscious effort is where human's free will is expressed, which exists beyond habits and character. If the brain is faulty, conscious effort becomes difficult, leading one to adopt many "good" habits to be able to live..!

Conscious effort exhausts the brain, which desires to function automatically like a robot. It achieves this through the multitude of images accumulated by habits and character to assist it. Moreover, habits and character create categorizations in the brain, instantly "labeling" whatever is before it, preventing the use of free will to judge. This is fatiguing.

Thus, we say, this person is a fascist, communist, fool, intelligent, atheist, Christian, Jewish, Muslim, etc., and we immediately attach the label already prepared by our character without bothering to use our free will to truly see who this person is before us. As a result, we're almost always mistaken!

The personal revolution a person undergoes, typically around the age of 20, is the only shining stage in his life where the free will triumphs. If he does not understand what we're saying now at that time, he moves on to the stage of forming habits and character that suppress and erase his free will as years pass. In the end, he becomes a robot without will, fully devoid of his free will, guided by the automated functions of his character, repeatedly echoing his own self. He ceases to live; he has died without realizing it.

Liberating oneself from the automated function imposed by one's character demands intense effort. However, upon achieving this, it brings relief and jubilation. It provides a fresh perspective on everything around, as if seeing them for the first time, for now they perceive things exactly as they are. These are the moments when free will triumphs, and we choose things and situations outside ourselves, our experiences, and our biases. We uncover methods and techniques that create new worlds, drive progress, alter environments, build cultures, leave legacies. Logic resulting in creativity exists because we possess a free will that surpasses the blind laws of nature and the environment's experiential, instinctual brain and neuron machinery, which lead to habits and the automated repetition of ourselves. Creativity means logic, it means free will, it means the existence of the soul, it means the existence of God!

Creativity

The primal consciousness of existence, God, transferred His consciousness of existence to man, with its attributes:

Creator God : Universe

Human Creator : Parthenon, Acropolis

" Make man in his image "

Comment by Mrs. Irini Christinaki, Professor at the University of Athens, on the above article

However, some people with automated daily lives may have an exuberant inner life. This richness of the soul is not achieved without the " here and now " under discussion. On the contrary, some look for freshness in the object of vision and not in the subjective reception of it. Their visible life has changes and an exuberance of new performances, occupations and experiences. However, their inner world remains unmoved.

Both approaches are very human. They are methods of dealing with existential anxiety, ways to forget the certainty of death, relying on the oblivion of death.

However, the only way for one to remain a living self is to have the lasting memory of the first time he realized that his death is a certain event that is going to happen. Usually this happens in childhood.

"Memory of death" means accepting the idea that we are still alive... If from a young age, we learn to live each moment with the value that impending death gives it, our soul will not age... And this is half the journey in teaching our children to follow a specific program. The other half is teaching them to joyfully embrace deviations from the program.

"The pleasure of a moment is to accept that it holds a moment"

THE SELF

The ultimate hypothesis about the nature of the Soul
" In image and likeness "

What is the SELF?

Wikipedia provides the following definition:

"The self is referred to as an individual human unit as the object of each reflective consciousness, the conscious "EGO" ("I"). Since the self is a reference from the same unit to the same unit, this reference is necessarily subjective."

In other words, the self is the consciousness of the entirety of the components that constitute the human being (body, brain, mind, memories, emotions, ideas, etc.), by a SPECIFIC entity expressed with the word "EGO", "I". It is the self-awareness of existence, the essence, the person with a Name and Surname, who "communicates" affectionately with other individuals and, by extension, with the entire living environment, liberating itself from egocentrism.

The question throughout all ages is where this entity, the Self, is established. Is it in the brain that we observe and study, or in an invisible essence called, the soul?

In the first case, the answer is simple:

We have studied the brain in detail, we have found how it functions and sets the body in motion, how it stores memories and emotions, and many other things. However, there is one thing we have not yet found, and we cannot provide an answer, namely:

Where is the self anchored within the brain, the consciousness of existence, the EGO that gives commands to the brain to set the body in motion? How did the bones and flesh of the brain come to realize their existence, begin to have emotions, direct the brain, and behave as a "single" specific individual, namely YOU?

In the second case of the existence of the soul, we will attempt to provide an answer, relying exclusively on the scientific theories formulated so far in previous chapters, completely avoiding any religious or philosophical influence on them.

It is clarified here that by the term "EGO" ("I"), we mean the conscious essence of a human being (not the "ego," or the "superego" of Sigmund Freud).

As previously mentioned, Stuart Hameroff, a distinguished professor in the Department of Anesthesiology and Psychology and Director of the Center for Consciousness Studies at the University of Arizona, and Sir Roger Penrose, a mathematician and physicist at the Mathematical Institute of Oxford University, proposed a theory that was initially confirmed in 2013. This theory suggests that the overall function of the brain arises from quantum vibrations taking place within the microtubules of brain's nerve cells (Orchestrated Objective Reduction or Orch OR theory). In other words, what these two distinguished scientists suggested was, the idea that what we call consciousness (soul) is actually a quantum computer, made up of the primary "threads" of an immortal creation. The brain is merely an organ that functions as an amplifier of this quantum, "immortal" computer. When the brain is destroyed through death, the entirety of the information and essence of this quantum computer is not lost, but remains integrated within the indestructible Universe from which it originated and of which it is an inseparable part. Dr. Hans-Peter Dürr, former director of the Max Planck Institute of Physics in Munich, also explains that just as a particle records all its information in its wave-like, energetic state, the human brain functions exactly like a hard drive connected to the internet. Initially, it records all the information and then transfers it to the "cloud," which, in this case, is the quantum, energetic, spiritual field (the soul).

Based on the above, we will attempt to provide an explanation of how the Brain - Soul duo operates and collaborates. The Soul, in order to shape the EGO (the "I"), that guides the body, gathers and records all the activities of the Brain, which are imprinted on it (memories, emotions, ideas, experiences, etc.). It then processes all this data, and following its nature, which is based on free will, it ethically self-forms (as good or bad). Subsequently, it freely activates the brain to provide commands to the body for its functioning, according to its judgment. The distinctive element in this process is that the already formed EGO, meaning YOU, when making decisions, does NOT draw information from the archives of the soul, where everything is recorded, but from the current "active" archives of the human computer, namely the brain, in the functional state it is in, at any given moment. This is because the soul, YOU, must always be aware of the "present" state of your body to make the right decisions for it. Thus, when we sleep, we do not have a consciousness of existence (unless we dream). Similarly, if we lose our senses or fall ill and lose our memory, we lack consciousness. The soul, the EGO, as long as it is connected to the body, experiences the body's events to be able to provide proper instructions to the brain for addressing every problem.

However, the same doesn't happen when the Soul separates from the body. At that point, the Soul (consciousness, EGO), which has its own senses, draws its information to "exist" from its own archives where everything that happened while it was guiding the body, is recorded. This state, as we know from numerous officially recorded testimonies of patients who briefly experienced the near-death experience and returned, is characterized by an ultimate euphoria to the extent that those who lived it did not want to return to life, as they later stated to doctors and relatives...! (see Bibliography). The intriguing element in these "death" experiences is that the patients are aware of the space they are in and have described situations and events "outside this space," which were, later, verified as true. This means that many of these experiences are real, neurologically unexplainable, and NOT the result of chemical processes in the brain at the moment of death!

Given all this, a final assumption we can make about the nature of the soul, is that it is a logical, individualized energetic state (YOU, EGO, US) closely linked to a machine, i.e. the human body, and it transforms the material world by shaping itself, the EGO, potentially towards the "good," based on experiences exchanged with other living beings, unknown for why!!!

Here, religions explain that after death, the soul reincarnates and returns to life countless times to fully purify itself (Eastern religions), or by living its one and only life, in the material world as an individual personality with a unique "EGO in the Universe," namely YOU with your specific name. It is shaped to achieve "likeness" to God, who created the soul "in His image". In other words, humans have been created with the freedom of will and action to be "creators," as God is ("in His image"), and their purpose is to acquire His "goodness" in order to resemble Him ("in His likeness").

They shape their EGO towards the "good", in this life, to reach divine union!

What is love
(see also p. 272)

Love is a feeling of intense affection and personal devotion. In philosophy, love is a virtue that represents human kindness, compassion and affection.

Love is at the center of many religions, according to the Christian phrase, "God is love".

Love can also be described as actions toward others motivated by compassion, or actions toward others based on affection.

The word love can refer to a multitude of different feelings, situations and behaviours. These feelings can range from the desire for romantic love (eros), the platonic love that defines friendship, the familial love between related individuals, to religious love and devotion. This wide variety of uses and meanings of the word, combined with the complexity of the emotions it encompasses, makes it difficult to define love compared to other emotional states.

Love, in its various forms, is a motivation for establishing interpersonal relationships, and because of its great psychological importance, it is one of the most frequent subjects of inspiration in the arts.

Source: WIKIPEDIA

<https://el.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Love>

From a Universal perspective, Love is the Force that unites everything in the Universe, expressing itself in the material world in its four forms:

Gravitational,

Nuclear Patient,

electromagnetic,

Strong Nuclear.

It is the personified force of attraction between entities that have acquired reason and free will!

It is the force, which acquired a consciousness of existence with the basic characteristic of "Freedom" of man, which is the great mystery of rational life that appeared in the universe..!

It is, in its primary state, the power of "association" of souls of the whole animal kingdom for the perpetuation of the species.

It is the "living" attractive force of Creation!

However, many modern neuroscientists, ignoring the source of Love's emanation and focusing their attention on the effects it has on brain function (secretion of dopamine, oxytocin and vasopressin), say, incorrectly, that Love is chemistry, (our chemistries match ..!), while the correct expression would be that Love creates chemistry. And of course the opposite is NOT true, that chemistry creates Love (see next chapter).

After that

Choose what Love is for you.

The Force that unites everything in the Universe!

The source that nourishes our words and transforms our thoughts into poems that touch people's souls!

The greatest story ever written, with its characters breathing and evolving through every page of the book of life!

OR the,

Brain chemistry!

Our hugs are a cold chemistry, a mechanism of simple program execution, without the slightest trace of love, which is a non-existent concept for man, because there is no soul and therefore the body acts only out of blind need!

"Paradise with a Pill"

Is Love Chemistry?

Some neuroscientists, seeking to overemphasize the value of their research and beyond, overlook the source of Love, which is the Soul, believing that it doesn't exist (a fundamental position of atheism). They focus on the effects of Love, brain functions like the secretion of dopamine, oxytocin, and vasopressin, and certain changes it brings, recorded through functional magnetic resonance imaging.

As a result, they claim that Love is ..chemistry! However, in following this reverse logic, they haven't yet managed to "create" Love experimentally, by inducing chemical secretions and changes in the brain.

Of course, if such a thing were possible, it would be remarkable because the world could change entirely with a pill. Everyone could feel and practice Christ's exhortation to "Love one another," and permanent global peace would prevail.

We're not referring to tranquilizers or mood-enhancing pills, or worse, narcotic substances.

With this pill, religions and political systems would disappear because they would be useless. All people would become robotic, "good and kind," without God, democracy, and free will, and chemistry would have replaced everything!

Paradise would become a matter of a single pill!

This time, I hope the scientists who believe in all of this, succeed. After all, who wouldn't want that ? The entire planet would transform into a paradise !

SOLITUDE

Sorrow, Solitude, Choice

Jiddu Krishnamurti

At the end of sorrow lies solitude.

Only in solitude there is no choice.

Choice, of any kind, implies conflict. In choice, there are inevitably opposites. These opposites, inner and outer, generate confusion and unhappiness. To escape from this unhappiness, one makes gods, beliefs, nationalism, and dedication to various models of activity seem like real needs.

By identifying with them, you make them important, but escape is the path of illusion, and then fear and anxiety arise. The path of choice is the path of sorrow, where pain has no end. Choice, selection, will always exist as long as there is the one who chooses, which is the accumulated memory of pain, pleasure, and every experience of choice; it only strengthens memory, which becomes thought and feeling.

Memory is of only partial significance as it is made to react mechanically, and this reaction is choice.

There is no freedom in choice. You choose according to the manner in which you have been brought up, according to your social, economic, and religious conditioning. Choice strengthens, without exception, this conditioning. There is no escape from this conditioning, which only breeds more torment.

Choice always breeds sorrow. Watch it and you will see it awaiting, demanding, insisting, fading away, and before you know it, you are caught in the net of inevitable obligations, responsibilities, and despairs it brings.

Observe it and you will have an awareness of what is truly happening. Be aware of what is happening; you cannot change what is happening, you can cloak it, put it under your feet, but you cannot change it. It is there. If you leave it quiet without interfering with your opinions and hopes, fears and despairs, with your malicious and cunning judgments, it will flower and reveal its intricate form, all its subtle movements (and there are many), its apparent significance and ethics, its hidden motives and concealed fantasies.

If you leave what is actually happening quiet, it will show you all this and more. But you must have an awareness without choice, walking quietly. Then you will see that choice, having flowered, dies and what remains is freedom, not that you are free, but there is freedom.

To die to the known is to be alone. Every choice is within the field of the known. Action in this field always brings sorrow. The end of sorrow lies in solitude.

Moments of Freedom

When people casually laugh, they look alike!

When people carelessly laugh, their character is lost, their configuration disappears, they cease to be robots!

When people laugh innocently, are free, are Universal beings, they reveal the mystery of Creation!

When people, like infants laugh, they are images of God!

The reasonable man who does not laugh is either God or Devil..
Look him in the eyes and you will understand!

When people casually laugh, they look alike!

Who is responsible for everything that happens in the world?

All external forms of change brought about by wars, revolutions, reforms, laws and ideologies, have completely failed to change the basic nature of man and therefore society.

As human beings living in this monstrous, ugly world, let us ask ourselves, can this society which is based on competition, brutality and fear, stop being so?

Not as a theoretical thing, not as a hope, but as an actual fact, so that the spirit becomes fresh and new and pure and can create a different world?

I think that this can only happen if each of us admits the basic fact that we, as individuals, as human beings, in whatever part of the world we happen to live, in whatever culture we happen to belong to, are totally responsible about the state of the world .

We are each of us, responsible for every war, because of the aggressiveness of our own lives, our nationalism, our selfishness, our gods, our prejudices, our ideals, everything that makes us divided. And only when we admit, not intellectually, but really, as we really recognize that we are hurting or, hungry, that you and I are responsible for this chaos and misery that exists from end to end in the world, because we have contributed to these in our daily lives and we are a part of this monstrous society, with its wars, discords, ugliness, brutalities and greed, only then will we do something.

So you and I can cause in ourselves, without any external influence, without persuasion, without any fear of punishment, we can cause in the very essence of our being, a total revolution, a psychological transformation, so that we cease to be barbaric, violent, competitive, anxious, fearful, greedy, envious, and all the other manifestations of our nature by which we have built the rotten society in which we live every day? What should we do, what is important in our life?

What is important is, to observe what is really happening in one's daily life, inside and outside of oneself. If you observe very closely what is happening and examine it, you will see that it is based on some intellectual perception and the intellect is not the whole field of existence. It is a piece, and a piece however masterfully connected, however ancient and traditional it may be, remains a small part of existence, while we must deal with the totality of life.

You don't need anyone to tell you how to see. You just see. Can you then, looking at the whole picture, looking at it not logically, superficially, but really, can you easily, spontaneously, transform yourself? This is the real issue, which is capable of bringing about a complete revolution in the soul.

Jiddu Krishnamurti

..you just see the beauty!

It's important to truly “see”

Right now, you're looking through images, memories, labels, characterizations, formations, and countless other filters that distort reality. Essentially, you're NOT seeing; you're operating automatically, without awareness. Therefore, you need to surpass all these 'clutter' in your mind and perceive what truly exists in front of you, so you can do what's right.

The sunset, the first time you see it, will leave you speechless with its beauty. However, the twentieth time you see it, you might not notice it at all. That won't have changed; it will still be equally beautiful. It's you who will have changed, and the clutter in your mind won't allow you to see it. You'll say, you got used to it, and immediately change your thought, without realizing you've lost its beauty forever, if you remain as you are.

Our lives are full of millions of habits that don't let us 'see,' 'feel,' 'perceive' what's happening around us, so we can act upon it.

But what's magical is that, the moment you grasp this function of your mind, at that moment, all the clutter within you disappears, and you see the Truth in front of you, around you, within you.

Of course, the clutter will come back unless you continue to stay awake, here and now.

Repentance, and metánoia (μετάνοια)

Much has been said about these two words, and I will try to give them another dimension, which reveals the mystery of life, in a simple and direct way.

«Repentance» (μεταμέλεια), derived from "meta-melo," means that I realize afterwards that I committed an error against someone else, which harmed them, and I do something to secure what I might lose due to this mistake. I usually say "sorry" after some time has passed and I manage to overcome myself.

Repentance "organizes" us in a worldly sense, perhaps eases our conscience a bit, but it doesn't lead us to rest and peace. It's an act of self-interest. We feel guilt for our mistakes and try in this way to "organize" our wounded self. According to materialists, repentance is purely an act of self-preservation carried out by neurons and solely concerns the blind mechanical functioning of the brain according to physical laws. It's about what we do to NOT lose something we put at risk due to some misguided action.

Of course, repentance doesn't mean that "something has changed within us" and that we won't commit the same misguided act that led us to repent, we will just be more cautious this time, so as not to be perceived by others. Repentance creates a very unpleasant feeling in humans. when one sees what he lost with what he did and realizes he can't do anything to regain it.

"Judas, repented, returned the thirty pieces of silver and went and hanged himself."

On the contrary.

Metánoia (μετάνοια), derived from the Greek words "meta-nous," means that after committing a serious mistake against someone else, we transcend our mind, meaning we change it and start thinking completely differently than before, that is, we change our life from now on. This means that we won't repeat the mistake we made, as the motives of self-interest that led us to it will no longer exist within us.

"Metánoia (μετάνοια)," a purely Greek word, doesn't exist in Latin-derived languages, which only have the word "repent" It can be expressed by the word "apology," but this is usually said immediately after committing the unjust act. More importantly, it's expressed over time through a change in lifestyle, which is noticeable by everyone.

Metánoia (μετάνοια), brings relief and peace to humans. It's the "practical remorse," as it is in legal terminology, which concerns a specific wrongful act.

"Metánoia (μετάνοια), is purely an act of the "mind," the "soul," and solely concerns the free will of the human being. It has absolutely no relation to the functioning of neurons and the blind mechanical functioning of the body according to physical laws.

Conclusion

If even once in your life you have felt remorse for something you did and have changed your way of life, you know from personal experience that humans are not mere flesh machines obeying the blind laws of nature, randomly shaping them, but they have a soul with free will.

As a result of this, the existence of God is something you have a personal experience of!

It's a very simple and easy way to create your own personal worldview of existence and adapt your life accordingly.

THE INSPIRATION

SADNESS, ANXIETY, DEPRESSION

Grief, this sensitive reaction of man, is the consequence of external events that put pressure on his soul. It is like a dark and heavy wind that blows through the recesses of the heart, mixing the sense of loss and melancholy.

Distress (στενοχώρια in Greek, which means “narrow space”), is how grief is absorbed. It is the feeling of limitation, isolation and uncertainty. It is like a close embrace that limits and holds the person, in the space of insecurity. Thoughts become small and limited windows, reflecting a sense of loss and uncertainty. Distress keeps man captive to pain and memories, capturing absence and boredom through the colors of the soul. It is the painful dance of shadows that surrounds the heart, keeping man isolated from the revitalization of light.

Finally, depression (I press, I push myself), is not just a reaction to external events, but a condition that is created internally, by the person himself. It is a dark response of the soul to despair, loss of hope and a sense of nothingness. In this state, the soul enters a deep and severe mental and emotional retardation, where thoughts and sensations become blurred and discolored.

Grief, this strange and difficult companion, reminds man of his fragility, the passage of time and the losses that mark his journey.

On the other hand, when hopes meet disappointment and dreamers clash with reality, depression is born. Then the thoughts and memories weave the veil of melancholy, while souls kneel before the uncertain outcome of depression. It is a common language we all speak, an excerpt from the novel of our existence.

Grief and depression mark our fall from immortality, and at the same time remind us of the complexity and transience of human existence.

Through the association of the words, there is an air of melancholy, a rhythm that accompanies our heart with every breath. It is a language of emotions that traverses the invisible path of the human soul, capturing the poetry and tragedy of existence.

In the darkness of grief, imposed on us against our will, by the external events of life, we find the opportunity to review the path we have traveled, to discover the depths of our soul and to perceive the essence of human existence. It is like walking through an ancient city of ruins, where the silent walls speak to us of memories that have faded but remain alive in our souls.

Grief and depression, however, are a part and responsibility of the human condition and accompany it, like the shadow that follows the light. They remind us that joy and sorrow are inextricably linked, that the true essence of happiness is reflected in the pain we have experienced. It is an inevitable aspect of our hesitant journey towards spiritual awakening and empathy.

But when spirituality pervades our lives, heartbreak and depression are removed from our soul's path. The dark shadows of pain are lost in the glow of inner brightness and despair is embraced by hope.

Spirituality unfolds as a dance of joy in the soul, modest and gentle at the same time. External pains become an occasion for internal feedback and search for deeper meaning. The spiritual encounter with ourselves and the world reflects the light of the soul and directs our attention to the core of being.

Spirituality acts as a pillar of rejuvenation, a spring river that nourishes the soul with inexhaustible substance. Man, seeking the encounter with his higher self and the divine, finds the unity and peace he seeks.

Spirituality opens the gates of conscious existence and reveals the purest core of human nature. In this clarity, heartbreak and depression disappear, like abstract stories that dissolve into thin air.

Spirituality is a garden where the soul blooms with flowers of peace and hope. It is a path of light, lined with trees of wisdom and truth, leading to a haven of love and rebirth.

Man ascertains his origin, and lifted from the embrace of spirituality to the heights of Creation, discovers that sorrow is but a shadow that pierces the passage of time.

Spirituality is man's connection with the invisible world and the eternity of existence. The hidden worries and darkened thoughts fade into the light of truth as spiritual power resonates in the heart of man.

In this state, spirituality embraces the soul and renews it with the sense of the warm embrace of the Unseen and the Supreme!

Alignment with the spiritual plane allows man to perceive his existence as a substance that it transcends its personal boundaries and is part of the creation of everything!

In the world of spirituality, grief is transformed into a spiritual learning, an opportunity for growth and transformation. Man recognizes that grief is an aspect of the human experience and an opportunity to reveal his empathy for humanity.

Spiritual practice does not remove sorrow from life, but transforms it into a lesson of growth and spiritual evolution. Man reveals the power to emerge from the dark abysses of his soul and upgrade his daily existence to a dance of harmony and inner peace.

Accompanied by the light of spirituality, man reveals the power of his inner will and faces adversity with bravery and determination. He understands that grief is not a permanent state, but a transitory experience that can lead to rebirth and evolution. Spirituality offers a dance between human sorrow and the independent soul. Man becomes one with the Supreme Being, realizes that sorrow is an aspect of the existing world, but does not define his identity. Rather, it is a means to gain a deeper connection with one's spiritual nature.

With spirituality as a guide and a sense of the divine as a constant companion, distress and depression disappear, while sadness is no longer an enemy that man must avoid at all costs, but an ally that can lead to renewal and reverence!

Delving into these lines, we change without having made any decision. A deep understanding of their meaning acts as a soul catalyst and frees it to peace, love and empathy!

NATURE

THE RAIN
by Filareti (Effi) Lefterioti

We are getting ready to go for a walk, and suddenly it starts raining. We have 2 options:

To start cursing the weather, getting angry, fighting, and feeling unhappy, closed within the four walls

or,

To accept the rain, grab an umbrella, go for our walk, and be happy, even if we get wet.

The "rain" is us, me, the other person, the "friend," the "foe," the whole world around us that we blame for being the way it is...

The umbrella is a small "click" we'll make within ourselves, we'll change something and accept those around us just as they are, because that's the "rain"!

It's in our hands to live with everything and everyone together and to be happy, only distancing ourselves when we're truly in danger of harm, when "lightning" strikes!

Everything is simple, very simple, as long as we are simple and humble ourselves. It's in our hands to enjoy them or not. These things are not to blame for anything, because it's the "rain." We're to blame our selves, for not understanding that!

The nature of the Soul

Summarizing all the concepts listed so far, in relation to the existing modern scientific theories about the nature of the soul, described in the previous chapters, we could list the following hypotheses about this serious issue that concerns all human existences, through of centuries..

The soul, in its simplest form, could be said to be a quantized energy bundle, required for the functioning of every living being on the planet. Its creation is the first great mystery of the appearance of life in the Universe. This was present and necessary for the creation of the first cell, but also subsequently, of all species of the animal and plant kingdom. It has an instinctive awareness of individuality (separates the body with its needs, from the environment, possibly creating corresponding feelings) and animates the organism, automatically processing the information it gives it and providing it with the life force that, together with its natural instinct, holds it to the "being" and directs it to the fulfillment of the physiological purpose of its existence.. In this form, the soul has no logic, (animals and plants do not produce history and culture and the constructions they may create, are instinctively, repetitive), so it is not responsible for the actions of the living organism. Therefore there is no configuration of it towards " good " or " bad ". It is absolutely pure existence, without the knowledge of death and decay, irreversible and unchanging, through which the universal attractive force ("love", p. 97), which unites everything in the Universe and is expressed in animals, as attraction and sincere devotion. So after death, their soul, which is only energy and has not undergone any mutation during life, loses its instinctive individuality and dissolves, as no longer serving the needs of the body.

However, with the appearance of man, which is the second great mystery of the existence of life in the Universe, the energy beam of his soul, which animates the organism, extended an additional "element", consisting of immaterial "essence", which is expressed through conscious attention (mental focus), and which emits mental energy, which manifests in the brain through conscious thoughts and guides it in its commands to the body. This " element " is independent of the brain, has its own senses and is self-existent and conscious, as a single, substantial entity in the Universe, denoted by the word "ME"! But it also has collective consciousness and captures the concepts of good, justice, progress, change, etc., as a result of which it creates cultures and leaves history . It has reason and free will, which can only be expressed as long as it has a body, so that through the brain, which is a flesh computer (see also p. 40), has the ability to make decisions, vis-à-vis persons and things in the material environment and to be able to shape itself towards good or evil. It is the Soul of man which, apart from its energy bundle, also has this "element" which essentially constitutes the nature of our self and our existence, which feels and lives life! It is the one in which the memories, emotions, experiences, etc. recorded in the body during life are transcribed and which are processed voluntarily, through the brain, so the soul is shaped into "good" or, " wicked " ... !

It is man with, potentially, logical energy (" Creator ") and mental energy (" Good "), who is guided " freely " by his soul, to do the " good " or the " evil ", to create civilizations or, to destroy them, to love or, to hate, to believe in God or not, to " question " whether the Soul of man:

"which has a consciousness of the existence of its Self, the Universe and God, which was created to be autonomous, but expressed through the body", does it survive after the death of man?

The nature of Energy - LIGHT

Quantum theory suggests that moments after the Big Bang, at 10 minus 43 seconds, the four forces (or, interactions) of nature, the strong nuclear, the weak nuclear, the electromagnetic and finally the gravitational were united in a " super -power ". The elementary particles quarks begin to combine in threes, forming photons, positrons and neutrinos, while their antiparticles were created at the same time. Then the formation of matter from energy is carried out by photons (light), which materialize into baryons and antibaryons

Therefore, the creation of the matter of the Universe was made from photons, that is, from LIGHT! And here we recall the Biblical phrase ".. and there was light ".

So the basic constitution of the Universe is light and this " something " from which the Universe came, and existed BEFORE the Big Bang, should also be " LIGHT ", of a different nature, self-existent, infinite and eternal, as we showed in the "On the Creation of the Universe and on the Soul" chapter (p. 31). Therefore the LIGHT of the Universe is " created " (it is the "effect") and the " LIGHT " pre-existing, as infinite and eternal, is " uncreated " (it is the " cause "). So, everything in the Universe is light! All matter and man came from photons created with the Big Bang! And that's why when matter is broken up through atomic and nuclear reactions, sparkling light is released!

Therefore, if man has a soul, then this too is " created " light. And here is perhaps the only point, in the matters of soul and God, which can be established through our personal experience, as the religions say, if we deal with it with effort..

Indeed the experience of light has been reported in many Eastern religions that practice the practice of deep Self Meditation, where the meditators experience the light of their mental energy and soul 'essence'. But the most important experience of light is that of Hesychasm, which is the way of life of the monks of the Orthodox Church, where those who pray, as they say, restoring their mental energy (their thoughts through conscious attention), from the ephemeral , in the "substance" of the soul (ie to have a conscious lack of reasoning), and invoking the " ESSENCE " from which the "uncreated LIGHT" "descends ", they have the mental and not logical, sense of Him, many times throughout the night, as a brilliant white light, accompanied by infinite peace and tranquility!

It is the "joyful light " mentioned in the ancient hymn of the Christian Church (dated to the end of the third or the beginning of the fourth century AD)

Light, more light!

Wolfgang Goethe

General conclusion about Psyche

The soul of man is "light", created to have, consciousness of existence, free will, knowledge of "good" and "evil" and expressed in the word "EGO" ("I"), i.e. "YOU"

During life, it is united with the body and guides it for its maintenance, manipulating its fleshly computer, the brain, in its transactions, through the body, with the environment and other people, expressing its free will and thus shaping its nature into good or evil.

But when it is separated from the body, though it moves, it "sees" spiritually, remembers and perceives, with unimaginable speed and energy, because it does not have the material limitation of the body, however, it cannot express its free will, its autonomy and revise, if it wants, the formation of nature of (good or, wicked). It no longer possesses the material body with its brain-computer, through which it did all of life's meditations, on the body's dealings with the material environment and other human beings (possessiveness, "MY"!). The soul, without the dependence of matter, becomes irrevocable and can no longer change its will, but still exists in the kindness or not, which it was when the body was separated.

THE CREATION

WHY DO I EXIST?

The articles of "STONE HEARTS" have brought to the forefront this perennial existential question of philosophers, theologians, scientists, and thinking individuals around the world:

WHY DO I EXIST ???

Thousands of formulated hypotheses, theories, philosophical viewpoints, and religious beliefs.

We will attempt to simplify the matter, completely excluding philosophical and religious beliefs and focusing solely on Scientific observations on the matter.

The answer to this question involves 4 categories:

1. I exist

to be able to survive this day, secure food and shelter, and protect those dependent on me. This position can evolve into a way of life with the primary pursuit of profit and the complete alienation of humanity. This is the choice of the majority of humanity, living their lives without engaging in the deeper examination of the subject and the ontology of human existence, which should guide them to make proper decisions in their relationships with others and themselves!

2. I exist, because I appeared by chance, due to the coincidental creation of the Universe, leading to the random evolutionary appearance of life. This is the old position of Science that is still accepted today by many Scientists. It is the basis of Atheism and is advocated by atheists worldwide.

3. I exist, because, I know that life goes on, after death, as, in the last 50 years, millions of personal experience testimonies of people, who were clinically dead for a few minutes, have shown that human consciousness survives after the body's death (near-death experiences, even by congenitally blind individuals who "saw" while clinically dead). Furthermore, strong indications for the existence of the Creator of the Universe have been discovered by Science, such as the Big Bang, the Higgs particle, the so-called "God particle," the incredibly complex creation of the first cell of life, the inexplicable event of matter gaining consciousness and the creation of humans, the complexity of DNA construction, etc.

4. I exist, because I live and explore to verify whether God exists or not and not to be wavering between the two hypotheses!

This category encompasses the majority of thinking individuals on the planet who are essentially "confused" about their belief or disbelief in God. They might realize their confusion due to family, environment, habits, and entrenched ideas - religious, political, social, etc. Such individuals might suddenly perceive their misconceptions and become interested in creating a correct worldview that will provide them with mental tranquility and peace for all future events.

The ambition of the author of this book is:

- a. To motivate readers of the 1st category to engage with the serious existential issues beyond their daily struggle for survival or dominance in the market, and to change their lives for a better "tomorrow" without the stress of competition and profit!
- b. To help readers of the 2nd and 3rd categories solidify or radically change their positions by transitioning between the two!

c. To guide the numerous readers of the 4th category to clarify their ideas definitively and irreversibly, regarding the existence or non-existence of God and soul!

Lastly, it's reminded to read the article "How to Read this Book" on page 319, with the utmost attention, before arriving at your final personal beliefs, about the existence or non-existence of God and soul!

BLACK AND WHITE

The other side of the coin

ATHEISM

The other side of the coin

Atheism means the denial of belief in the existence of Gods or God. Atheism, in the broadest sense, is called the absence of belief in the existence of deities. In a narrower sense, atheism denotes the rejection of belief in the existence of deities. In an even narrower sense, atheism takes the specific position that there are no deities. Atheism stands in contrast to deism and theism, according to which a deity exists.

Atheism appeared around the same time period in Ancient Greece and China. It expanded in Ancient Rome, but waned dramatically during the Middle Ages in Europe. After the renaissance and the Enlightenment, atheism re-emerged in Europe, and influenced several philosophical and political currents of the 19th and 20th centuries. Today atheists number significant percentages, although difficult to count precisely due to the multitude of definitions, and are growing mainly in European countries, Australia and Canada.

Arguments

Arguments for atheism range from philosophical to social to historical. The rationale for not believing in god includes arguments that point to the lack of empirical data, the problem of evil, the religious diversity argument, the rejection of unverifiable positions, and the argument from non-belief. Defenders of atheism claim that the burden of proof is on the shoulders of theists to prove the existence of god. Although some atheists have adopted secular philosophies, such as humanism, there is no one ideology or behavior which all atheists accept. And vice versa: not all theists believe in the same god.

Depending on the arguments they express, atheists can be classified into different categories, hard or soft atheism (hard affirmatively states that there are no Gods or God, while soft includes the other forms of atheism). "New Atheists" is the name given to a group of atheist writers who have attracted the attention of the public with their aggressive language towards religions. Atheists today emphasize the need for secularization of the state and education, which must stop being used as a tool to indoctrinate children into religions.

Atheists have argued that humans cannot know or prove the existence of god. In various religious philosophies, divinity is inseparable from the world, including body, mind, and consciousness, which is enclosed within each individual being. In the rationalist agnosticism of Immanuel Kant and the Enlightenment, knowledge comes from human reason; according to this line of atheistic agnosticism, we cannot know whether gods exist. Skepticism, based on the ideas of David Hume, claims that certainty about anything is impossible, so no one can know whether God exists or not. Hume, however, observed that metaphysical concepts, of which we have no observations, they must be rejected as 'sophistry and illusions'. However, whether agnosticism should be counted as atheism is something that is disputed, as it is considered by some as an independent worldview.

Other arguments for atheism that can be classified as epistemological or ontological, behavioral they include gnosticism, according to which there is a lack or difficulty in understanding the meaning of the concept of god and phrases such as "god is almighty". According to Theological agnosia, the phrase "God exists" does not express a position but is empty of meaning. Although there is a dichotomy over whether these positions are classified as atheism or agnosticism, philosophers AJ Ayer and Theodore M. Drange reject this categorization as both accept that the phrase

"God exists" has meaning, (but either do not accept it or question it) and put ignorance as a separate category.

Metaphysical arguments

Metaphysical atheism includes all schools and thoughts related to monism (homogeneity of reality). Metaphysical atheism can be a) absolute, i.e. explicit denial of the existence of god and related to materialistic monism (of all kinds of materialistic monism, from ancient times to modern times) and b) relative, i.e. non-ambiguous denial of God in every philosophy that, while accepting the existence of an absolute Being, does not attribute to him the attributes that usually characterize God: transcendent, person, unity. This idealistic form of monism is related to deism and pantheism.

Epicurus is credited with the first example of the problem of evil. David Hume in his 1779 Dialogues on Natural Religion referred to Epicurus for his argument, couched in the form of a series of questions:

"Does God want to prevent evil but is not able? Then he is not omnipotent. He can but he doesn't want to? Then he is not all good. And wants and can? Then why does evil exist? He doesn't want to or can't? Then why should we call him God?"

Rational arguments

Some atheists consider that various theories about gods, such as the personal god of Christianity, do not show logical coherence. This type of argument presents a series of inductive arguments that consider certain properties, such as the perfection of god, the possibility that he created the universe, the claim that he is not subject to change, the proposition that he is omniscient, or that he is omnipresent, or, omnipotent or, all-good, or, transcendent, being a Being (person), being immaterial, just and merciful.

Atheists who practice theodicy believe that the world as we know it cannot be explained by the attributes usually attributed to god. They argue that an all-wise, all-powerful and all-good god is incompatible with the world where there is the problem of evil and human suffering, while divine love is hidden from many people.

Deductive arguments

Philosopher Ludwig Feuerbach and psychoanalyst Sigmund Freud argued that God, and other similar ideas, are human inventions, created to serve psychological and emotional needs or desires. Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, influenced by Feuerbach's work, argued that religion is a relief for the oppressed people, according to Freud it is a psychotic fantasy and according to Friedrich Nietzsche it is the revenge of the weak against the strong. According to Mikhail Bakunin, "the idea of God means the abstraction of human reason and justice; it is the most decisive denial of human freedom and necessarily results in the slavery of mankind, in theory and in practice." THE Bakunin, reversed Voltaire's famous aphorism "If God really existed, we would have to abolish him".

Types and classifications of atheism

Diagram showing the relationship of Strong Atheism with Explicit and Implicit Atheism. A) The hard Conscious Atheists say: "There is not a single god" B) The soft Conscious Atheists say: "I don't believe there is a god", but neither do they say: "I believe there is not a single god". C) Unconscious Atheists do not believe in the existence of God, but without rejecting his existence, e.g. the newborns. (the size of the sets is not proportional to their population status)

Conscious - Unconscious Atheism

Conscious Atheism represents the absence of theistic beliefs due to their conscious rejection, while Vague Atheism means the absence of theistic beliefs without their conscious rejection. The terms were coined by George H. Smith in 1979.

George Smith defines " Unconscious Atheism " as " the absence of theistic belief without a conscious rejection of deities" . " Absence of theistic belief " includes all forms of non-belief in deities: a) adults who have never heard of the concept of deities, b) adults who have heard of but not considered deity theories c) children and infants and d) the agnostics.

Conscious Atheism is divided into 3 subcategories, according to Smith, depending on the reason he states led him to atheism. a) declares " I don't believe in the existence of deities or supernatural beings" , b) declares " no there is a god " or " it is impossible for a god to exist " and c) states " the idea of the existence of gods is stupid" .

Graham Oppy classifies those who do not have a theistic belief, because they do not know the concept of God, as innocent. In contrast to atheists and agnostics, innocents did not answer the question of whether there is a god, because they cannot think about the question of whether there is a God. Oppy gives the example of children a few months old, patients with advanced dementia or with severe brain trauma, all of whom are innocent.

Positive - Negative

Positive Atheism (or strong or hard) is the form of atheism that states that there is no God or deities.

Negative Atheism (or weak or soft) is any other form of atheism, e.g. a person who states that he does not believe in a deity but does not explicitly state that there is no god (hence the negative). That is, they do not strongly believe in the non-existence of deities.

New Atheism

The "4 Horsemen" of New Atheism: Richard Dawkins, Christopher Hitchens, Daniel Dennett, and Sam Harris.

According to R. Dawkins, "We are all atheists for most of the gods that societies have ever believed in. Some of us go a step further" New Atheism, (according to critics: evangelical atheism, or militant atheism, or fundamentalist atheism) is an atheistic movement that emerged in the last decades of the 20th century and argues that religion should not be tolerated whenever trying to influence government, education, or politics in general. The phrase first appeared in an article in Wired magazine in 2006.

The New Atheists identify with secular Humanism, especially in criticizing education that allows children to be indoctrinated into religions. Harsh criticism against religions, however, is not something new. There were several earlier ones with strong criticism against religions (Ludwig Feuerbach, Vladimir Lenin, Friedrich Nietzsche, Karl Marx, Bertrand Russell, Mark Twain, etc.).

New Atheists tend to share a general set of assumptions and opinions. These positions form the underlying theoretical framework known as the New Atheism. New Atheist writers share the central belief that there is no supernatural or divine reality of any kind. They claim that religious belief is irrational. And finally, they appreciate that there is a universal and objective secular moral standard.

This moral element distinguishes them from other prominent historical atheists such as Nietzsche and plays a key role in their arguments because it is used to conclude that religion is bad in various ways.

The New Atheists make substantial use of the natural sciences both in their criticisms of theoretical faith and in their proposed explanations for its origin and evolution. They use science to recommend alternatives to religion. They believe that empirical science is the only (or at least the best) basis for genuine and true knowledge of the world, and insist that a belief can be epistemologically justified only if it is based on sufficient evidence. Their conclusion is that science fails to prove that there is a God and even supports the claim that one, indeed, probably does not exist. What science will show about religious belief, they claim, is that that belief can be explained as a product of biological evolution. Furthermore, they believe it is possible to live a satisfactory non religious life, based on secular morals and scientific discoveries.

Atheism+ (plus)

Atheism+, (Atheism+), is the atheism that keeps the belligerent rhetoric of the New Atheism, but rejects the positions of the " New Atheism " that it considers as conservative (racism, Islamophobia, white supremacy) and in their place promotes the defense of progressive policies such as social justice, feminism, anti-racism, pro-gay rights and use critical thinking and skepticism. The term was coined in 2012 by a blogger, then Biology graduate student Jen McCreight, on her blog. Atheism+ differs from Humanism in the aggressive tactics it adopts against its opponents.

Antitheism

The term Antitheism is used with two meanings. The first covers those who see theism as dangerous, destructive, or encouraging harmful behavior. Christopher Hitchens offers an example of this approach in Letters to a Young Contrarian (2001), in which he writes: "I am not so much an atheist as an antitheist; I do not merely claim that all religions are versions of the same illusion, but I believe that the influence of churches and the influence of religious beliefs is harmful."

The second meaning of the word antitheism takes a different place. Antitheism states that there is a god who is absolutely evil. But this meaning is theistic rather than atheistic.

Humanism

The term Humanism (or, "secular humanism" as opposed to the religious atheism of previous centuries) describes a concept which is not identical to atheism, but is related to it. Although humanists are usually either atheists or agnostics, Humanism promotes religious indifference and the secular, irreligious state, while promoting its moral principles as the basis of society's functioning. Humanists are in contrast to the "New Atheists" since they follow the Humanistic rather than Scientific trend of atheism and emphasize the policies of social justice, anti-racism and tolerance.

Humanism did not take the New Atheism's aggressive stance against theists, instead there were voices calling for mild theists to join the Humanist movement in pursuit of common goals.

Atheistic philosophies

Evaluative or constructive atheism rejects the existence of deities while supporting the existence of a "higher value" such as humanity. This kind of atheism defends humanity as the ultimate source of morality and values, while allowing people to solve the moral problems that arise without turning to God. Marx and Freud used this argument to convey messages of liberation, growth and unlimited happiness. One of the most frequent criticisms of atheism, however, moves in a different direction: if you deny the existence of god, you are led to moral relativism and are left without moral or ethical foundations, and unhappy. Sam Harris responds to this criticism, arguing that morality is innate in humans, giving a biological, evolutionary explanation: The evolutionary process instilled in humans the instinct for morality as it gave them a survival advantage.

The French philosopher Jean-Paul Sartre, characterized himself as a representative of atheistic existentialism and was not so much interested in denying the existence of God as in documenting that... " man needs... to find himself again and to understand that nothing can save him from himself, not even a real proof that there is a god ." Sartre said that the consequence of his atheism was that "if God does not exist, at least there is a being whose existence precedes essence, a being which exists before it is defined in any other sense... This being is man." The practical implications of this kind of atheism were described by Sartre as meaning that there are no a priori rules, or absolute principles that one can invoke to regulate human behavior, so people are doomed to discover for themselves the principles by which they will live, making man the absolute responsible for everything he does!

" There is no God " - this is the conclusion of the late physicist Stephen Hawking, whose last book was published in 2018.

Science does not experimentally study the possibility of existence or non-existence, God and soul, because it is not possible to test these concepts under the electron microscope, nor in a spin in the laboratory, in a test tube, which are the accepted scientific methods of at-will repeated verification of an event.

So all that remains is the evaluation by the reader, of the existing positive or, negative evidence about God and the soul, for the personal formation of opinion.

Information on Atheism can be obtained by readers, in addition to this detailed and extensive article, from a few other articles in this book (pages 42, 51, 56, 151), and from the web by searching the biographies of many well-known atheists. mentioned above and study the philosophical and logical arguments they cite.

Readers can obtain information about Theism, in addition to the texts on the existence of a Creator of the Universe, near-death experiences, etc., which are developed in many articles of this book, but also from the web, if they follow the listed addresses or, investigate persons and events listed in the above articles.

THE PROBLEM OF EVIL

Atheists' basic argument for the existence of God:

"An all-wise, all-powerful and all-good god is incompatible with the world where there is the problem of Evil and human suffering, while divine love is hidden from many people."

I put this to ChatGPT, Google's AI brain, and it gave me the following answer:

ChatGPT

This view belongs to theology and specifically to the problem of evil. Many theologians have dealt with this problem and have tried to find an answer to it.

One answer given by some theologians is that god is not responsible for evil in the world, but that, it is because of the free will of man. That is, people have the freedom to make bad choices and cause pain and misery in the world. This view is often called the theocracy of freedom.

Other theologians believe that god can use evil to achieve some even more important purpose. For example, the world may suffer, to help people develop more compassion and altruistic behavior.

Also, some theologians believe that divine love is present in the world, but may not be recognized or hidden from many people, because of various factors, such as sin, selfishness, or lack of faith. According to this view, personal experience and relationship with god can reveal divine love in human suffering and bring spiritual comfort and hope.

I note that the above are some of the many views and theological approaches that have been formulated to address the problem of evil and the lack of recognition of divine love. Each approach has its supporters and critics and depends on each individual's personal beliefs and religious traditions.

In general, the coupling of a suffering, all-powerful and all-good deity with the existence of evil and human suffering is a complex and controversial issue. Religious and philosophical debates on this matter have lasted for centuries, and no absolute and universally accepted answer has been found.

Some accept that the existence of evil and suffering is an inevitable part of our world, and despite the existence of an all-powerful and loving god, human freedom and human choices bring about negative consequences. It can be argued that god allows evil to exist in order to provide man with freedom of choice and the ability to grow and learn through facing adverse reality.

Other theologians try to explain the problem of evil through the concept of God's absolute love. They argue that god, despite the existence of evil, absolutely loves all beings and seeks their good. It can be argued that god uses pain and evil to lead people to growth, search for truth and their spiritual development.

It is important to note that the answers to these theological questions are often subjective and based on faith, spiritual experiences and traditions. Religions and schools of philosophy have different theories and approaches to these issues.

The problem of evil and the lack of recognition of divine love, remain important philosophical and religious issues

CONCLUSION

In other words, the world we live in, is a challenging school that educates us for the "virtuous" shaping of our soul, our consciousness, our self. God allowed evil to exist in the world so that we have the freedom to choose it or reject it (pages 125 and 133). This way, we learn to shape ourselves, through our own will, towards the good rather than the evil. As a result, in the eternal life that follows after the death of the body, our soul is drawn upwards towards love rather than downwards towards destruction!

It's exactly like an object submerged in water: if its weight is greater than the water it displaces, it sinks and moves downwards; if its weight is less, it rises towards the water's surface. The weight of the object represents the degree of shaping of the soul towards good or evil. Since the soul becomes unchangeable after the body's death, it becomes fixed in its trajectory either towards the higher or the lower.

Let's take a self-test to determine the current state of our soul, consciousness, and whether we are on an upward or downward path. We can check if thoughts of God and respect for Him, attract, please, and resonate with us, or if they leave us indifferent, cause fear, or repel us. This indicates whether our consciousness, our soul, after the body's death, will be drawn or repelled from God, with a continuous desire for proximity or distance. This trajectory will be established.

Through our choices regarding evil, we prepare ourselves for either Hell or Heaven.

Moreover, if evil didn't exist, the necessity for this world wouldn't exist either, since, no matter how good it might be, it wouldn't serve a purpose. Additionally, Science tells us that eventually, the Universe will be destroyed and fade away.

God's decision, evident by the creation of entities "in His image and likeness," happens through our "free" choice or rejection of evil. This is why its existence is necessary.

It's a Divine plan for the elevation of humanity, the creation of "small gods" with the characteristics of the Creator of the Universe. These entities won't be mere copies of God; they will have their own essence, consciousness, and self. This needs to be achieved solely through our free will, not through divine intervention or command.

It's God's "respect" for humanity that grants us personal essence, self (EGO), and complete freedom to make decisions about our lives!

"Whoever wants to come after me... let them follow me."

For evidence that the soul exists, that consciousness persists after death, and the self, the EGO, continues, please refer to "Life After Death," page 156 (the next chapter).

THE EXODUS

LIFE AFTER DEATH

QUESTION: DOES LIFE CONTINUE AFTER DEATH?

This age-old question has intrigued people of all eras in various ways. We will now delve into it in this book, informing readers about all the latest information and developments on the subject.

ANSWER: YES, INDEED, LIFE CONTINUES AFTER DEATH!

This has been confirmed in the last 50 years, from 1970 onwards, through extensive research and studies, and numerous publications on the millions of cases worldwide that have revolutionized Science. These are cases of individuals who were clinically dead for a few minutes, but returned to life and reported that while they were "dead," they had consciousness and a self (EGO), even outside the body. As a result, the concept of "life after death," previously a matter of religious and philosophical "faith", is now becoming accepted as scientific "knowledge". In other words, more and more Scientists, authors, and critical thinkers are embracing the idea that our self, our consciousness, persists and exists after death.

Furthermore, the truth of life after death is unquestionably confirmed by the incredible experience of Vicki Noratuk, also known as Vicki Umipeg (now Vicki Blazon). This experience is detailed by Kenneth Ring and Sharon Cooper in their book "Mindsight, Near-Death and Out-of-Body Experiences in the Blind," and is presented in a one-hour documentary from 2002 by BBC, "THE DAY I DIED."

<https://dai.ly/xy56k9>

Vicki, now 72 years old, born in December 1950, blind since birth, never having seen light, shadows, or darkness. Her only connection to the world was through sounds, scents, and touch.

At the age of 22, on February 2nd, 1973, she suffered an accident and was transported unconscious to Harborview Hospital in Seattle, USA. There, her heart and brain stopped functioning, and she was clinically dead.

And then her consciousness returned, and for the first time in her life, she saw from above! She was terrified because this was completely unfamiliar to her. She "saw" a body on the bed, and the doctors trying to revive it. It didn't take her long to recognize that the body was hers, identified by her wedding ring that she knew well from touching it and her long hair. She felt wonderful, seeing and hearing everything, she went outside, passing through the hospital ceilings to the rooftop, and for the first time, she saw trees and birds that she had only known from their sounds. She heard a beautiful sound of low and high tones and saw people walking in a brilliant light. She couldn't describe the peace, calm, and love that surrounded her. Suddenly, she was pulled back into her body, the moment that the medical instruments indicated her heart and brain were functioning again. This was the worst moment of her life, as Vicki later described, because she didn't want to return to her body but wanted to remain as she was before.

The case of Vicki Noratuk, one of the 21 congenitally blind cases, mentioned in the above book, is entirely inexplicable by Science, as her brain, even if it were functioning, couldn't provide the visual information she had during her brief death.

Furthermore, in the aforementioned book "Mindsight" by Kenneth Ring and Sharon Cooper, it is explicitly stated on its cover, that:

"The evidence of blind from birth, during near-death experiences, reveals a unique type of perception. More than 'seeing,' it involves a deep awareness and profound ability to know, that the authors of the book have called 'Mindsight'."

All interpretations presented by various scientists until now, regarding the millions of testimonies of similar experiences (near death experiences) of people who were clinically dead but revived, due to medical progress, are ruled out. These interpretations previously attributed such experiences to near-death brain events, caused by oxygen deprivation.

The only explanation is that Consciousness, the self of a person, continues to exist after death and operates freely, with all memories intact, shifting across time and space. The limitations imposed by bodily illnesses disappear, as did Vicki's blindness, and people feel free to do and experience anything!

Death is abolished... and this is absolutely certain for the millions of individuals who experienced Consciousness while clinically dead. They firmly believe that life continues after death, they don't fear death, and they say that whatever pursuits they had before in life, power, wealth, fame, or anything else, the most significant goal in life is to learn how to love. Their ideas and philosophy change; they become simpler and more humble, believing in God and helping those around them.

All this information is derived from "Life after Life" (1975), the bestselling book with over 13 million copies sold, about near-death experiences, which popularized the term NDE (Near Death Experiences), by Raymond A. Moody, the renowned American philosopher, psychiatrist, physician, and author. Additionally, information comes from the book "CONSCIOUSNESS BEYOND LIFE" (2010) by Pim van Lommel, M.D., a world-renowned Dutch Cardiologist and expert in near-death experiences, who conducted extensive research and concluded:

"The dead have been shown to NOT be dead. I now see the continuity of our consciousness after the death of our physical body as a very real possibility!!!"

You can obtain all three of the above books online. Check out also the excerpt from the award-winning BBC documentary about Vicki Noratuk' s experience, which has Greek subtitles and is only 4 minutes long:

<https://youtu.be/OT1aEcPST2g>

In conclusion, as a result of all the above, Consciousness accompanies us eternally, and how we shape it "now," while we possess this body. Through the brain, which acts as a computer, we have the ability to express the free will of the soul and make decisions about people and things in the material environment. As such, we can mold Consciousness towards good or evil... (page 163) In other words, we now know that " only now ", we can transcend our ego, become humble and obtain our eternal peace of mind and goodness. Then, when we lose this body, we become unchangeable, the soul cannot express its free will, and we exist eternally, unable to change ourselves.

And if, as long as we have this body, we create a SELF, a Consciousness, that is good and humble, we enjoy it eternally, living in paradise!!! However, if we create a SELF, a Consciousness that is cunning, selfish, and damned, we endure it eternally, without being able to change it or be freed from it...

Hell and paradise, "we", ourselves, create them, as long as we have this body, and they accompany us eternally, without us being able to change them..!!!

The desire of the souls in Hades is, according to Saint Paisios:

"...if only we could live for five more minutes, just to have time to repent..."

I AM THE ONE

In order to understand the following text, you must first read the article on page 173, carefully.

I am the ONE. You see it written in the image of Christ.

What does it mean: I am the ONE?
I am the ONE who “is”. This defines God: “ HE IS “ !

On the other hand, what does " I exist " mean ?

It means that I am under someone else's authority, underneath someone else who has empowered me to govern, to have free will, and to do as I please..!

So, God doesn't exist, God IS! Because God IS, I can exist (under-exist).

If God doesn't 'exist', then I am, let's say, even if it's shocking, a piece of garbage, because I don't have that someone else underneath whom I can draw strength and 'govern', that is, to 'exist'.

Furthermore, it is asked, why can't I “BE” like God?

Because there's death.

In the end, what is the future of humanity without God?

It will turn into a lifeless corpse, and those who still love it will rush to bury it quickly because it will stink.

So, the future without God is our 'trashification.' That's our value.

And those who deny God haven't understood that they're denying themselves!!!

Source: Edited text by Blessed Metropolitan Sisanou and Siatistis Pavlos.

The above text is the exaltation of the Greek language, which, through the variety and composition of its words, says everything and expresses all meanings.

Thus, the word 'exist' contains the essence of God: I am under someone else who has empowered me to 'govern,' to 'exist'!

And the word "is" describes what is NOT located under something else, so it HAS NO boundaries, neither in space nor in time, and it is immaterial and formless. And this is the nature of God, which "is" an infinite, "is" an eternal, "is" a simple, formless, intelligent "essence," which is the cause of all things that "exist," "subsist," beneath it. In other words, God is the cause of the Universe or Universes, if there are others, which "exist," "subsist" beneath Him (subsist = exist)..!!!

This text cannot be translated precisely, into another language.. In order for someone to understand it, they must have a good knowledge of Greek!!!

IT CONCERNS ALL OF US

See in the following table the states of the soul that make it wicked and malicious, disconnecting it from its inherent nature of goodness and kindness.

These are the flaws of humanity that only "now," with this body and its brain-computer, can confront and change, if one manages to overcome their selfishness, communicate peacefully with others, genuinely repent for any wrongdoings, and thereby attain the goodness and kindness that will bring peace to their life! Because after death, the soul, without the meaning body, cannot change its nature in any way and becomes "irreversible". Its configuration, whether wicked and malicious, remains eternal (page 133).

And if the above configuration of wickedness and evil, which the soul harbors, is greater than the configuration of goodness and kindness it might possess, then it sinks downwards, towards darkness and despair, and cannot move towards the higher path which is light and joy.

Therefore, only the individual determines from "now" the course of their self-awareness, their soul, after the death of the body, based on the degree of goodness versus wickedness they have cultivated. At that point, they can do nothing to reverse this situation. Their free will, without the body, does not operate!

It should be noted that among the aforementioned cases, there are also 21 instances of congenitally blind individuals who, during their brief moments of death, SAW and described the same experiences as mentioned above. This fact demonstrates that these impressions are genuine and not products of a dying brain, due to lack of oxygen (hypoxia). This brain obviously lacked visual records to provide these impressions.

The 23 evils of the soul are:

1. The evil of slander
2. Of insolence
3. Of envy
4. Of lying
5. Of anger and wrath
6. Of arrogance
7. Of blasphemy
9. Of frivolity and foolishness
10. Of usury and deceit
11. Of laziness and sleep
12. Of greed
13. Of grudge
14. Of sorcery and divination
15. Of gluttony
16. Of idolatry
17. Of homosexuality
18. Of vainglory
19. Of adultery
20. Of murder
21. Of theft
22. Of fornication
23. Of asplachnia (lack of compassion)

On the contrary, the 15 virtues of the Soul are:

1. Self-control
2. Humility
3. Self-criticism

4. oligarchy
5. Piety
6. Reverence
7. Modesty
8. Self-denial
9. Ethics
10. Truth
11. Love
12. Justice
13. Prudence
14. Philanthropy
15. Spirituality.

DIASPASI (THE DIVISION)

DIASPASI" (Page 339), a film that was distinguished in 1973 at the TEN BEST Film Festival in London. It is the film about consciousness that I shot in 1969 (I act and narrate myself in the film), a few days after man's first moon landing, in which film I predicted that human consciousness can function "outside" of the body. This prediction was done 4 years before the remarkable event of Vicki Noratuk in 1973, where, despite being born blind, she "saw" during the 10 minutes she was clinically dead after an accident. This marked the beginning of scientific research into such cases (many millions worldwide) that proved, what I had predicted and depicted in my film in 1969: that human consciousness (the soul) is immaterial, separate from the body, and survives after death!

PROOFS OF THE EXISTENCE OF GOD

Thousands of scientists claim that there is now proof - " Yes, the universe was created by God "!!! (Video). Scientists who before were atheists and did not believe in anything, now turned into faithful followers of the existence of God!

Thousands of scientists around the world claim that they now have scientific evidence to prove that the universe was created by God and not just randomly by nature.

Despite strong claims from their atheist colleagues, another significantly large portion of scientists report that there is now scientific evidence to support that the universe was created by God, while for the first time thousands of scientists claim that there is proof that the universe was created from nothing.

Can science really prove or disprove the existence of God?

Can respected scientists who are " champions of atheism " change their minds?

Can the works of the creator of the universe be filmed on video?

According to these scientists, there is now scientific evidence that the universe was created by a higher divine power and science has proof that the Universe is completely intelligently designed.

English philosopher and most famous atheist Antony Flew was brave enough to admit he was wrong

He announced that after examining the latest scientific research, he was certain that some kind of supreme intelligence must have created the Universe. In short, based on scientific evidence, he proved the existence of God. In a video entitled "God Discovered", he stated:

" I think of a God very different from the God of the Christian faith and far from the God of Islam, because both are portrayed as all-powerful despots. It could be a person in the sense of a being that has intelligence and a purpose, I suppose. My DNA research had shown me, the almost incredible complexity of the arrangements required to produce life, so there is also here this higher intelligence that is involved ".

Israeli scientist Gerald Schroeder, from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology with over thirty years of research and teaching experience, argued that science has proven the existence of God as described in Genesis.

In a five-minute video, Schroeder proved that the universe was created out of nothing by the " force of nature " exactly as described in Genesis and the Bible.

Then, in 2015, an image taken by a special NASA telescope, sparked speculation that God had been " discovered " 17,000 light-years away.

The Sunday Express reported:

The European Space Agency's Spectroscopic Telescope Array, or NuSTAR, had one goal pulsar (or neutron star) called PSR B1509-58. From an impressive distance from Earth, this sent back to us, was a spectral vision of an outstretched hand, which has come to be known as the Hand of God. The 'hand' is believed to be the remnants of the star that went supernova and ejected a huge cloud of material, creating the pulsar PSR B1509-58 in its wake .'

Recently, Michio Kaku, a theoretical physicist at the City College of New York, known as one of the developers of the revolutionary string theory, describes how all particles are actually vibrating strings and how these strings propagate through space and interact with each other, confirming -knowing the existence of the Supreme Being, which he described as the action of a force "that governs everything", as Strange reports.

" I have come to the conclusion that we live in a world made by the rules created by a supreme intelligence. Believe me, all that we call randomness, today has no meaning anymore. It is clear to me that we exist in a plan that is governed by the rules that were created, and is shaped by a universal intelligence and not by chance. The bottom line is that God is a mathematician. The mind of God, we believe, is cosmic music, the music of chords resonating through 11-dimensions, into hyperspace ."

There are scientists who, while they were atheists and did not believe in anything, have now become faithful followers of the existence of God, themselves becoming more fervent than the believers, common mortals, here on earth.

THE UTERUS

Do you remember it? You too had this question, then..., inside your mother's womb, BUT NOW YOU KNOW..!

In the womb of a mother are two babies. One asks the other:

" Do you believe in life after childbirth?" and he answered:

" Why do you ask?" Of course. There will be something after the birth. We may be here to prepare ourselves for what comes next."

" Nonsense ," said the first.

" There is no life after birth. What kind of life would that be ?"

The second said:

" I don't know, but there will be more light than here. Maybe we walk with our feet and eat with our mouths. We might have more senses than we can even imagine now ."

The first answered:

" This is absurd! Walking is impossible. And to eat with the mouth? Ridiculous! The umbilical cord gives us food and everything we need. But the umbilical cord is too short. So, life after childbirth is, logically, excluded ."

But the second insisted:

" Well, I think there is something and maybe it's different than is here. Maybe we don't need this physical cable' anymore" .

And the first answered:

" Nonsense. And besides, if there is life then, why has no one ever gone back from there? Birth is the end of life, and after birth there is nothing but darkness, silence and oblivion. It leads nowhere ."

" Well, I don't know ," says the second, " but we will certainly meet mother and she will take care of us . "

Then the first baby answered:

" Mother? Do you believe in mother? This is ridiculous. If the mother exists, then where is she now? "

The second said:

" It's all around us. We are surrounded by it. We are part of it. It is in her that we live. Without her, this world wouldn't even exist."

Then said the first:

" Well, I don't see her, so it makes sense that she doesn't exist ."

And then the second baby answered:

" Sometimes when you get quiet and focus and really listen, you can feel the presence her, and you can hear her beloved voice, calling you from above ."

(By the Hungarian author, Útmutató a Léleknek.)

Now replace for yourself, the words " birth ", " mother " and natural " cable " umbilical cord, with the corresponding words of our life..!!!

THE MIRACLE OF THE GREEK LANGUAGE

The word 'exist' (υπάρχω) is analyzed as follows by the artificial intelligence computer of Google, ChatGPT:

The word 'υπάρχω' (exist) comes from the compound word in ancient Greek, "υπάρχειν" (hypárchein), which consists of two parts: the prefix "υπό" meaning "under" and the verb "άρχω" meaning "rule, govern, exercise authority." Thus, the word "υπάρχειν" literally means "to be under the authority of someone" or "to obey someone."

In other words, the word 'υπάρχω' (exist) includes the notion of God under whom everything He has created resides, and which "rules" harmoniously, whether they are matter or belong to the plant or animal kingdom. And that's why we use it for "everything" in the elements of the Cosmos, for whatever we observe around us, feel, or live!!!

In one word, "υπάρχω" (exist), the Greek language has expressed everything that has been said by all Philosophies and Religions of the world about God, Universe, Life, and Man!!!

Did you realize this? Have you ever thought that by saying the words 'υπάρχω - υπάρχεις - υπάρχει - ύπαρξη, υπάρχοντα, etc.', you are referring to God, even if you don't perceive it? Have you understood the power of this word, which even if you don't want to pronounce it, you inevitably think about it and, therefore, it directly connects you with the concept of God!!!

And, of course, God does NOT exist (is not found under... anything else), but He "is." And this is the other Greek word, εἰμί, εἶμαι ("I am"), that expresses the concept of God.

"I am who I am" (ο ΩΝ, a participle of εἰμί, I am) «Εγώ εἰμί ο Ων», written in the icons of Christ.

The Greek language teaches and expresses everything, but we ignore or distort them and destroy the language, which is admirable and unique globally, because, along with Latin, it is the foundation for the creation of all other languages in the West!!!

MONASTICISM AND NOT LONELINESS

“Monastic and not Alone”

Regardless of whether we are in thousands of groups, eventually "all" of us feel, at some point, that we are either "monastic" or "alone"..

In other words,

"Monastic," if we accept the presence of God in our lives (see the explanation of the word "monastic" in the note below),

or

"Alone," if we deny the presence of God in our lives, leading to loneliness (similarly, see the explanation of the word "alone," further down).

Thus, "monasticism" (monkhood) is desirable, as opposed to "loneliness," which is undesirable...!

So, how do you feel now,

Fine?

due to the presence of God in your life,

or,

Bad?

due to your loneliness.

In other words, do you feel that you are "monastic"?

or,

do you feel that you are "alone"?

NOTE:

The interpretation of the meanings of the 2 words above emerged as follows:

"Monastic":

derived from the broad application of the word as a noun, for those living in monasteries and devoted to religious worship (e.g., the monk Arsenios).

"Alone":

derived from the corresponding noun "loneliness," indicating the complete spiritual isolation of the individual, and therefore, his deliberate denial and detachment from God.

CONCLUSION:

A person never feels "alone" (loneliness) when he has God in his life.

On the contrary,

A person constantly feels "alone" (loneliness), regardless of how many companions he has around him when he lacks God in his life because he does not accept Him... and that's why he seeks "entertainment" or constant occupation with something to escape from his "self" and his fears...

However, in most people, there are moments when they may feel ambivalent between the above 2 states and struggle to understand and accept them, when their egoism allows them to do so.

Monastic" is someone when accepts the presence of God in his life,

*"Alone"
when he denies it*

Kleptomania, Avarice, Envy, Manic depression, Inhumanity, Sadism, Evil. Effects on negative people and treating them with Kindness

Kleptomania

Kleptomania belongs to the category of impulse control disorders, (the sufferer loses control of a specific impulse), and is more common in women.

Kleptomaniacs have no fear of God, (“do not steal”), just like the greedy and steal, experiencing satisfaction as a result.

Stolen items usually have little value to the individual. They could have paid for them, unless they also suffer from the disease of avarice.

The kleptomaniac enjoys the tension he experiences before the theft and the feelings of pleasure, satisfaction and relief when he commits the theft.

Although someone with this disorder will generally avoid stealing when immediate arrest is likely (such as in front of a police officer) or when in an environment with surveillance cameras, they usually do not fully consider the possibility of arrest. or revealing it, thinking that others are stupid and will not perceive them..

Theft is usually done without the cooperation of others, unless they are under the influence of avaricious individuals, who gladly accept and exploit this defect by cooperating with them.

Often, people with kleptomania also suffer from another psychiatric disorder, such as depression, anxiety, or mania.

Kleptomania symptoms include:

- Feeling of increased tension, just before the theft.
 - Feeling satisfied, hallucinations, delusions, or revenge and anger.
 - Feeling of pleasure, self-admiration and relief, immediately after the theft.

The kleptomaniac commits his thefts with full consciousness of knowledge of his actions and often, in order not to be noticed, uses the method of hiding things, in environments he often visits. Specifically, when he wants to steal an object, he changes its position in the house he is in, without taking it. When some time has passed and he finds that the owner has not returned it to its original location or, has not visibly looked for it, then the kleptomaniac steals the item safely, under the foolish impression and justification to himself, that he simply took a lost item !!!

Thefts can be an expression of antisocial personality disorder, conduct disorder, or a manic episode, and kleptomania can even begin in childhood. In this case, the child's family bears a serious responsibility, which, while aware, tolerates this situation and accustoms him to take this defect for granted, which now accompanies him throughout his life.

Kleptomania, when it coexists with avarice, envy and manic depression, are the worst forms of incurable mental illness, which ultimately lead to alcoholism and the taking of psychotropic drugs, culminating in the loss of mental functions (dementia, hallucinations and confusion) or, the appearance of serious physical ailments which lead the patient to despair, with all the dangerous consequences of this situation. The patient's chances of survival are almost zero and only a miracle can save him, if he manages to "come to his senses" and change his life. But usually, especially if there is a strong heredity, the result is extreme depression, dementia and mental hospital or, if mental confusion has not occurred, suicidal ideation, so the kleptomaniac must be closely monitored for his protection.

Avarice

The serious illness of the soul (by Fotis Kontoglou)

Of all the diseases that afflict the human soul, the worst, in my opinion, is avarice. I hated it since I was little. And now, even though, with age, I've changed my mind about many things, I haven't changed about stinginess. I'd rather deal with a murderer than a miser. Why, the murderer may have killed in the heat of his soul, upon his anger and repented afterwards, while the miser is a cold calculator, spoiled to the bone. In the murderer you may find some feelings, in the miser you will find none. The miser, of course, is always selfish, he loves only himself, but, many times, he is a monster worse than the selfish, because he may not even love himself and let him die of hunger. By this man shows how he can reach a state that none of the other animals can reach. Only he, who called himself "the king of the animals," reaches such abject folly that, out of his avarice, he hides the money in the mattress or the pillow and dies of hunger. Have you seen any stingy dogs? Or any donkey, that has plenty of hay to eat, and yet does not eat it and is found dead from hunger? You see how the miser is a madman, and indeed the most unsympathetic, the most obnoxious madman.

But even he who is an ordinary miser and who does not reach the passion I mentioned also has a certain coldness about him. You hesitantly approach him. You can't deal with him freely because he is also double-buttoned "spangorramenos", as they call him. Because stinginess makes him a hypocrite and suspicious.

Money is a dangerous thing and very poisonous to the soul. Many start with economy and little by little, they become greedy, in the end Mammon rides them. With avarice, the heart of man narrows, as with open-handedness it widens. A miser is a miser and in feelings, he cannot have anything brave in him. How can such a person make a sacrifice for another?

The love of money brings the greatest calamities to mankind. Judas the miser betrayed Christ. And most of the quarrels between people, the grumblings within families, the wars that ravage the world and fill it with blood, are caused by damned money. Interests.

The Church, during Holy Week, sings many tropes that condemn avarice. He calls Judas " son of echidnas, treacherous, traitorous, illegal " and exhorts us to banish avarice from ourselves.

This evil disease is today very lying and very heavy, a universal passion that eats the hearts like a worm, in East and West. Never have people loved money as much as they do today. Because today's man is materialistic, he doesn't believe in another life, because he doesn't believe in God and throws himself headlong into enjoying this life. This life that, until you get to see it, leaves and disappears, like a shadow. So this shadow is being chased by the unfortunate man today and he is punished and killed for this shadow, thinking that he is doing something with the money.

I have met many of them, who have much wealth, and I have seen their anguish and their unhappy happiness. I am not speaking of those who are prevented from enjoying life because they have diseases or other misfortunes, but I am speaking for those who have Health and every means to live well.

They have everything, except happiness. Happiness, true happiness, is far away from them, first of all because life is a fickle thing, like the needle of Nastradin-Khoja, which stood on top of an egg. Happiness without security, it cannot be. The rich man is increasingly restless, he is afraid of what will come to him tomorrow, what will dawn. Then riches bring trouble, confusion, cares, and he who is busy cannot be happy, because he is never alone with himself. And he who never lives with himself, does not know what happiness is. The source from which happiness springs, is not the Bank, nor the “bezachta”, but the human heart.

(Excerpt from the book "Mystic Flowers", Papadimitriou Publications).

“Property” is in Greek «περιουσία» (περί - ουσία). «Ουσία» is Substance and «περί» is what ever surrounds it. This is the Substance (the Property) of man.

We are attached not to the "substance" of our existence, but to those things that "surround" it, which we believe we possess (our property), thus losing the Truth of Life..!

Envy, Jealousy

By the psychologist Pavlina Poulidi

Envy is the intense feeling of resentment that a person experiences for another's happiness, goods, success and social status. It is jealousy that is accompanied by a feeling of hatred and malice towards those around us. According to the Oxford English Dictionary, emotion is described as, “ any agitation or, agitation of the mind, feeling of passion. Any fierce or exalted state of mind , so is envy, which is among the most fierce and intense emotions. In essence, envy is the denial but also the difficulty of recognizing positive characteristics in others.

It can hide behind anger, indignation, bitterness, annoyance, hostility and in extreme situations even pathological hatred. Usually, people who exhibit envious behaviors and feelings have low self-esteem and a lack of interests. They desire to get the better of their fellow man and take pleasure in the failure of others. They resent people who excel and try in every way to degrade them and belittle their achievements. If they don't succeed, they focus on their negative elements, which of course exist in all of us. Envious people are jealous of the success, intelligence, abilities, achievements, and natural gifts that others possess in contrast to them.

Certainly a key factor that affects the behavior of the “envious” person is the intensity of the emotion. In a mild form, envy could also act as a motivation for personal development, while in an extreme form it could manifest itself with aggression and extreme jealous behaviors. Envious people find it difficult to accept the positive traits of others and are relieved to see their failure. They are unhappy and cannot enjoy their lives, because they always want what others have and these thoughts radiate, so that no one can stand them.

It is therefore important to guard against such people. An effective way to avoid them is distance. By not caring, we create a distance from these people, and automatically the negative interactions we could have, are reduced. We try not to provoke the manifestation of their negative emotions, keeping a polite attitude towards them, without sharing our achievements. You should think carefully before you post things that cause jealousy and envy. It is also good to maintain your humility and modesty, so that feelings of envy are not ignited in these persons.

Many times, even we, have noticed in ourselves behaviors or thoughts that manifest envy. When this happens, we must not despise it by justifying it, on the contrary we must try, and "work " with ourselves, so that such feelings are not perpetuated and vicious circles are created with contented envy. A good way to kill envy is to focus on ourselves and rebuild goals. By setting personal goals and achieving them, we feel satisfied with ourselves and this has the effect of increasing our self-esteem. So we no longer have the need to desire and expect the failure of others in order to confirm ourselves.

Soul navigating through a storm of emotions

Manic depression

It is bipolar disorder where someone presents mania followed by depression.

Mania is the state in which the person experiencing it has only a subjective perception of himself. That is, he has a false image of himself and others, with a tendency towards their destruction and disappearance. He believes that everything is the fault of others and therefore commits frenzied and thoughtless acts against them. From time to time he shows intense outbursts of anger, and moodiness (short and intense changes of emotion, from joy to sadness and vice versa). He has a deep-seated inferiority complex, immense ego, never admits his faults and therefore, never says "sorry" and never says "thank you" for the good they do him. He has, as his main purpose in life, the profit, from the shameless exploitation of others. He is greedy to the point of stupidity and all his actions, tend to belittle others in order to feel superior. He never laughs with his heart, never enjoys any moment of his life and never helps others..

Depression is the condition where someone has negative thoughts about his self, society and his environment. Its main symptoms are a feeling of inferiority, a feeling of low self-esteem, sadness and melancholy, which can be expressed by crying, isolation, sleep disturbance, a feeling of guilt for everything that happens, irritation and possibly, a feeling of anger and aggression.. The extreme form of depression leads one to terrible impasses about the future of his life, fearing that everything will happen to him (what will I do now?) and may even create thoughts of suicidal ideation.

Manic depression is one of the worst mental illnesses and there is no cure unless the manic depressive himself, realizes his condition and understands that the root cause of his illness is his "boundless selfishness" that imprisons him hermetically within himself and does not it allows him to break the shackles of the terrible situation he is in, so that he can begin to communicate calmly and peacefully with others, "giving" and not "taking"..!

Unfortunately, the manic-depressive, rarely "comes to himself", changes and self-heals. Most of the time, he reads this text, recognizes the truth that it conveys and the next moment he forgets everything and continues to immerse himself, due to habit, in the situation he is in. And then he turns to the "psychotherapists" and starts the tranquilizer pills and soon the alcohol and becomes an alcoholic or, in the extreme solution of the chemical substances, which will make him a drug addict, if by then he has not lost his mind or, has not already given himself an end at his life.

Inhumanity, Sadism

Evil people

Many times even a small and insignificant event can reveal to us a toxic person with a black soul.

They are the ones who behave inhumanely, despise life, and have no emotion in them except malice and hatred for others. They are demonized when they see around them people who care and help others, without, of course, this, preventing them from exploiting them.

It is the mean-spirited people who have poison in them. Thus such a man:

1. He walks along the street and sees an old woman, fallen down, alone and helpless, who stretches out her hand, saying to him, in a pleading tone,

" can you help me up? " and receives the curt reply from him,

" not now, I'm in a hurry", and walks away, without a second word, with a quick step, leaving the unfortunate woman to her fate, struggling to get up from where she fell..

2. He knows that his parent or, his relative from whom he has benefited repeatedly, is in immediate need of help. But he pretends not to understand and leaves him helpless, with funny pretexts or, just coldly, without any excuse..

3. They are foul-mouthed persons

They identify weaknesses, needs, bad psychological states, serious illnesses of others, etc. and in every situation, they throw them at them, talking to them, like the echidna its poison, to harm them and satisfy the demon they have inside. So they can make others even try to kill themselves or, cause someone who is seriously ill to cry and despair and lead him to an early death, enjoying their wickedness.

I am sure that this list can be filled with dozens of other cases, from those who have met such people in their lives, and it is an opportunity for these people, if they read this text, to realize their situation, to forget that, " .. it's always someone else's fault for everything", to do a deep introspection and change their way of life, permanently and irreversibly. Otherwise, their future will be to be abandoned by others, so as not to harm them, as a result of which they will completely despair of their lives and finally end up in alcohol, substances and drugs, in neurological clinics, in violation of the Law and prison or, in suicide, when they are overcome by remorse for the harm they have done to others and the fear of God begins to control them!

Evil

Signs that the person you have in front of you is mean-spirited

Usually a look or a conversation is enough. However, if you see any of the following signs in someone, it means that they have long left kindness behind. Needless to say, such people are to be avoided as the devil avoids frankincense. They have nothing good to offer you, so keep them out of your life, your family and your friends.

Wickedness is something that can hardly be defined, but is very easily perceived. Someone is bad when they have malignant, or malicious behavior. They call them many words: immoral, sick, abnormal, damaged and many other words. They have the behavior that good people avoid as much as possible.

If at some point in your life you meet a really bad person, neither definitions matter nor anything. You will know him as soon as you see him. You will meet him everywhere: at the supermarket, at church, at the cinema, at a theater performance or at a friend's house.

The warning signs that a person is malicious are many.

He enjoys the misery of others. Your misfortune is his fortune. Your failure, his success. Your unhappiness, his absolute happiness. Such people enjoy seeing you suffer and hurt. They delight in the evil that may befall their fellow man, and live by your own misfortunes. Such people are dangerous because they are capable of harming you, just for the pleasure they derive from it. It is important to identify these people and remove them from your life, before horrible things start happening to you and those around you.

He has serious control issues.

Bad people have this in common: they want to control others. They cannot control their own lives, so they try to control others. They don't trust anyone, they are obsessive and liars. At first they put on the face of a kind and good person, but if you make the mistake of letting them get to you, you will soon find that they will try to control your life.

He is usually dishonest and a liar.

The liar, or rather the pathological liar, belongs in a special category by himself. From a certain point onwards, he tells lies without realizing it. He is dishonest and lies about everything so that he can somehow "inflate" things and appear smarter or better than someone else. A bad person can lie about himself, about you, or about everyone else. The only thing that is certain, is that he is a liar and dishonest and will remain so. The lie is for him a tool to manipulate reality, which does not always serve him the way he wants. If he's caught lying, he'll find a way to get out. He is so brazen that he will probably challenge you to prove his lie. He gets strength from what he does.

You feel weird when you're around him.

It has been proven that our body emits an energy field, which serves as an intuitive defense system. It's like when you eat something and your stomach hurts. You didn't know beforehand if it was good or not, when you ate it, but your stomach or sometimes, your skin shows you that what you ate was not so good after all. So you may not understand the villain by what he does, but you will feel him. You are close to him and you shiver. It's like if you touch it, you'll get an electric shock. It might sound crazy to you, but it's true. Always trust your instinct, because it will never betray you. If you make a mistake, you can always apologize, but it's better to be suspicious than fall into his trap.

He can easily fool you.

He is deceptive and can easily fool you, that he is something other than what he shows. It can easily influence the way you think about him and make you agree with his desires. He manipulates everything the way he wants and creates a world that is hard to understand or believe. You can easily understand the evil, the cunning man, if only you observe how he works. As soon as you suspect that he is trying to lead you in a different direction, change direction and leave.

He feels no remorse.

He does what he does, but he feels no remorse. The word "remorse" is an unknown word in his vocabulary. He is not upset, nor even sorry for the harm he causes to others, instead he will look to put the blame on you and make you believe that the reality you see is not real. He intends to lead you to a strong outburst or intense anxiety and manipulates you in its own way. He is never going to admit his mistake, so as, not to spoil the image he has so carefully built.

He is brazen.

So far, we have talked about those who try indirectly and in insidious ways to harm another. But not all of them are wicked and hypocritical. There are also those who bring out their bad self openly to everyone, not caring about the bad opinion that others will form about them. They fight easily, hurt the people they love, and are victims of the prison they built for themselves, which is why they get so much joy from the misfortune and pain of others. If you're in a relationship with someone who so openly brings out their bad self, find ways to get rid of them as quickly as possible. The malice and cruelty of such a person can cause you serious damage one day.

They are irresponsible.

They are unethical and will do whatever they want, whenever they want, without accountability to anyone. Such a person will never feel responsible for the pain he causes others. He knows it's his fault and won't do anything to fix it. He likes to throw the ball of blame on others and doesn't know what the word "sorry" means, or maybe he does, but he thinks that apologies are for the weak. Most likely, he will make you apologize for his own mistakes.

Such people do not count on your friendship.

He will look to get what he can from you without caring how you feel. Whatever he does, he does it on purpose and for no other reason. If something happens to you, don't expect him to be by your side.

He hates animals and hurts them.

Cruelty is not only seen towards humans, but also towards animals. A man who is objectively evil will not hesitate to harm a defenseless animal. This is how future criminals start. If you harm an animal on purpose, it is very likely that you will harm a human in the future. Never trust people who hate or harm animals.

He is racist and sexist.

Evil lurks where good is absent. Excessive bigotry, racism and sexism, have raised generations and generations of bad people in the world. There are no words. Such people, in addition to being bad, are also dangerous.

He is manipulative.

They are two-faced with split personalities. One minute it can be in kindness and goodness and the next, in malice and hatred. Such people are only kind when they want to get something from you. They know how to manipulate you and make you believe that they will return the favor you do them.

He underestimates you.

One of the worst manipulative behaviors of a bad person is emotional manipulation, which often comes in the form of undermining and belittling. You can underestimate someone in so many ways. One of them is to play the victim when nothing has happened, to make fun of someone for their appearance, their body, their interests, their home or, their dreams. A bad person can underestimate everything. Don't let such people change the opinion you have about yourself or the decisions you have made. You can just say, "I'm sorry you don't like my life, but this is what I like," and then, hello!

He's trying to confuse you and get you to fight with others

They have a special tactic and a strange talent for making people fight. They like the confusion and conflict in general, especially when it is to their advantage. The more doubts they give you and the more spies they put in to make you fight with others, the more power they get. Don't fall into this trap and have no confidence. Always keep your distance and try to cross-reference what you hear.

He doesn't care about what we consider respectable and sacred

They are stubborn, sarcastic, stuck in their own world and liars to the point of disgust. No matter how bad they treat you, they will always come back to you, because they have nowhere else to go. With sweets and caresses they will try to trick you into accepting them back. If you do, know that the consequences will be tragic.

Always remember that these people don't change. No matter how good they play it, they are rotten inside. You can't change them. They are and will remain, unchangeable. It takes a lot of work, but first they have to want themselves to change and recognize their problem.

Effects on them, of the negative behavior of envious people

It is a Law of Nature, no energy is wasted and envy and malice, are intense, directed, mental negative energy, towards a person.

If this energy is not absorbed by him, because he is good and kind, then it is reflected, returns and falls on the one who sent it, who immediately absorbs it because it is his energy..

And then he wonders: why should this happen to me? why am i not well, why did i get cancer and so many more.

Evil always returns to the one who sent it, when it does not fall on the other, because the other has goodness in him that acts as a shield!

Evil fears love, optimism, peace, devotion, giving!

So let those who still think in this way and do not change to draw lovingly to others around them take heed,

" they play with fire..!"

..and don't forget that:

The stones you threw and the words you said, do NOT come back any more, they accompany you throughout your life..!

Evil becomes a boomerang and destroys you..

Man really only has what he spends, the rest is dust..

You know how much money you have, but you don't know how much time you have..

HEARTS OF STONE, petrified by selfishness and stupidity, eventually destroy those who have them..

HEARTS OF STONE soften and change only with "kindness" that banishes the beast called "selfishness".

Healing with Kindness

Kindness is man's greatest strength!

" Giving " and not " taking " is the smartest human behavior in life!

To behave in this way and to enjoy it, without expecting anything in return, is what they call " happiness ", " fullness ", " joy "!

Then you really enjoy life and the things you need to live will find you by themselves!

Then you will sleep at night peacefully, without sleeping pills, because you will have eliminated from within yourself, all the calculus of criticism towards others!

Then you won't have any worries about the future because you won't expect to get anything!

Then all your misfortunes in life will take on their real dimension, they will last as long as the event and you will not have self-pity!

Then you will have defeated within you, the biggest beast that consumes and destroys man, "selfishness" and you will have become simple and humble..

Then you will accept all people as they are and enjoy your life!

This book will help us to answer

If we say

Because there IS a GOD who made us and willed us to live

Then God Himself will answer us and tell us who we are, what our purpose is and what we should do. Just let's keep our eyes open, be honest with our faith and not get carried away by ephemera..

If we say

Because everything is random and THERE IS NO GOD

Then let us organize our lives and the society in which we live, as best we can, respecting others and keeping our eyes open so that we do NOT turn our needs into passions, which, ultimately, destroy us..

*In both cases, when we "get", let us learn to "give",
even WITHOUT "getting"

*The "beginning" does not change, it is behind us, but we can change the "end",
it's ahead of us!*

ml

*We come naked, we leave naked
with luggage the good we did or, the evil we sowed*

Great Scientists talk about God

Plato

"God always calculates"

"God created the world in divine harmony, like this expressed by the musical scale"

Nicolaus Copernicus, 1473 to 1543
(priest, supporter of the heliocentric system)

Astronomy is the summit of all intellectual arts, and must be considered the noblest occupation of the free man, of all the branches of mathematics. As it is the property of all the noble arts to guard against vice, and the human spirit to occupy itself with better things, this astronomy must accomplish in a greater degree. And this because it gives great pleasure to the spirit. For who does not perceive the inner and perfect order, which is directed by divine wisdom and is not pushed on high, and ought not to admire the Architect of all things, in whom is the highest blessedness and all good? »

Sir Francis Bacon, 1561 to 1626

" only a small sip from the glass of philosophy leads perhaps to atheism; but stronger sips lead back to religion"

" Only half-knowledge leads away from God, while true science leads to Him"

" God does not perform miracles to convince atheists, because even his ordinary works can convince "

" That God exists and governs everything, that he is all-powerful and wise and a good forerunner of all things, that he rewards everyone's actions and deserves to be worshipped, all these are understood by the natural mind and constitute the content of natural theology"

" All life must be dominated by love, the willing devotion to the common good, which is mandated both by the natural law and by the Gospel; this elevates man to God and brings to the soul the supreme nobility"

" Discoveries are in a sense new creations and imitations of divine works."

John Kepler , 1571 to 1630
(called the "Lawgiver of Heaven")

" I consider it an arrangement of divine Providence that Mars had been explored precisely at the time of my arrival (near Tycho Brahe). Through the movement of this star we must reach the secrets of astronomy or remain in constant ignorance" (he wrote in 1609).

" I regard it as a right, nay, a duty, to inquire carefully into the numbers, masses, weights, and rule, by which the all-wise Creator created all things. For the secrets of his design are not such that their investigation is forbidden, but rather they are presented to us as a mirror before our eyes, in such a way that, when we examine them, we may somehow glimpse the goodness and wisdom of the Creator . .

*" I wasted a lot of time in this search, in this game with numbers, but I could not find an order either in the numerical ratios or in the deviations of these ratios. Finally, on a completely insignificant occasion, I came closer to reality. I always prayed to God to make my plans succeed, if what Copernicus had said was true " (in the Preface to Mysterium Cosmographicum 1597).*

" Great is our Lord and great is his strength and his wisdom, there is no number. Praise him the heavens, praise him sun, moon and all that wanders, in every sense to understand it, in every language to it address your Creator. Praise him heavenly harmonies, praise him the hearers of extraordinary harmonies. Bless you too my soul, Lord your Creator, as long as I exist. That from Him and through Him and to Him are all things, both the sensible and the mental; both those which we are ignorant of, and those which we know - the least of them. Because so far most are there. To him be praise, honor and glory forever and ever. Amen" (epilogue to his work "Harmony of the World").

"Heavenly movements are nothing but an eternal song for many voices. So we should not wonder if man, imitating his Creator, finally discovered the art of singing, which the ancients did not know" (in the book the harmony of the world 1618).

"This is as far as I have been able to think about God's creative work. Now I have no duty to remove eyes and hands from the manuscript, to raise them to heaven to beg reverently and humbly to the Father of heavenly lights. You who arouse in us the desire for the natural light of knowledge;

You, who turn us to the light of the stars, to help us and lead us to the kingdom of your glory. I thank you, Lord my God, because you refresh me through your wonderful works and because I rejoice in the works of your hands."

"I am a Christian; I was taught the faith by my parents. I embraced it by constantly investigating and with daily questions its foundations and I hold on to it. I never learned to pretend. I take faith seriously and do not play with it' (letter of 1598).

"We are all (including me) ephemeral. I, indeed, hasten to have these published as quickly as possible, to the glory of God, by whomever wants to know himself from the book of nature. The more after this others want to build on them, the more I will probably rejoice; I will not envy at all. These they prayed to God.

I have this certain opinion. I wanted to be a theologian. I was very sorry for that. But behold, God is now glorified in astronomy through me. Finally, after Peter, I exclaim: "Come out of me, that I am a sinful man"" (letter to Maistlin)

"(to succeed) so that the belief in the creation of things is fixed with this external support, so that the nature of the creative mind becomes known, and His inexhaustible wisdom is daily demonstrated to us greater. In such a way that man can measure the powers of his mind and reason with the exact rule, since God has created everything in the whole world with a view to quantity, and this mind, which was given to man and which these are captured i" (letter).

" When I work in creation, it's like touching God with my hands."

"Astronomers as priests of God in the book of science, must have firmly in mind not the glory of their own logic, but above all else the glory of God" (letter to Herwart)

" If the mind is stripped of the ideas of divine things, it ends in simple denials ."

" My desire is to be able to discern God, whom I find everywhere in the external world, in the same way within myself" (in World History of Civilization, W. Durant vol. VII page 658 to 659).

" Astronomy has an illegitimate daughter, astrology, but it must feed its mother! ». "(astrology) is the baby (stupid) daughter of the pleasant and cognitive mother astronomy".

" When I was alive I measured the heavens, now the dark deserts.

"The spirit came from God, it is not overshadowed by the black earth"

(epigram on his tomb, composed by himself)

Galileo, 1564 to 1642

" The divine architect first created the Sun and determined a fixed position for it, then he formed the planets in the space and left them from their position to move around the attractive Sun... Thus falling the planets removed in a moment God, each of them, from such a movement, gave a circular trajectory"

"I must tell you something, which I heard from a famous ecclesiastical man of my time, Cardinal Baronius: 'The intention of the Holy Spirit is to teach us how one goes to heaven, and not how the heavens move.'

"Philosophy is written in that great book, which is constantly before our eyes (I mean the Universe), but we cannot understand it, unless we first learn the language, and apprehend the characters, in which it is written . It is written in the language of mathematics, and the characters are triangles, circles, and other geometric figures, without which it is humanly impossible to understand even a word of it, and without which one wanders aimlessly through a dark labyrinth" (in the work of Il Saggiatore 1623)

" I am inclined to believe that the authority of the Holy Scriptures is intended to convince men of those truths, which are necessary to their salvation, and which, being far from being understood by man, cannot be made trustworthy by all learning or, any other means than by the revelation of the holy Spirit. But to say that God, who endowed us with senses, reason, and understanding, does not allow us to use them, and desires to communicate to us in any other way this knowledge, which we are able to acquire by ourselves through these possibilities, this seems to me impossible to believe, especially in regard to those sciences, of which the Bible contains few passages and various conclusions. And this is exactly what happens with astronomy, about which so little is mentioned, that even the planets are not all enumerated " (Letter to Castelli)

" I do not feel bound to believe that the same God who endowed us with intelligence, reason and intellect willed us to renounce the use of it ." (World History of Civilization, Will Durant volume G page 666)

" The Bible and the phenomena of nature proceed alike from the holy Word, the former as the dictate of the Holy Spirit and the latter as the observant executor of God's commands " (Letter to the Grand Duchess) (after the destruction of his sight in 1638):

" This universe, which I have traversed a thousand times, ... is now confined to the smallest space of my body. That's how God willed it; that's why I have to accept it too" (World History of Civilization, Will Durant volume G page 671).

Descartes, 1596 to 1650

(mathematician, physicist and philosopher)

" From the fact that I exist and have the appearance of a being of perfection, I deduce very early (=clearly) the existence of God".

"I think, therefore I exist"

"I think, therefore there is a God"

"If there are still men, who are not sufficiently convinced of the existence of God and of their souls, let them learn that all other things, of which they perhaps think they are more certain, such as that they have a body, and that the Earth and the stars exist and the like, is less certain."

"God, when he created me, placed this idea within me, that it might be, as it were, the mark of the Creator, engraved on his work... I want to examine, whether I, myself who have this idea of God, could exist , if there was no God. And I ask myself, where would I have my existence from? It is evident that I do not owe my existence to myself, for if I were capable of giving myself existence, I would at the same time give all the perfections which I lack... Do I come from my parents? But they are not what sustain me or make me a thinking being. If I go on thinking like this, from cause to cause, I shall find the last cause; and that cause is God."

"The general cause of motion can obviously be none other than God, who in the beginning simultaneously created matter and its motion and rest, so as to preserve in the world as many states of motion and rest as he had originally created them".

"God exists; and this conclusion is no less clear and obvious than that the number two is even. But in this case we must be free from all prejudice, have the power to separate our spirit from our senses, and the power to be free from arrogance and from the spirit of contradiction"

"Existence can no longer be separated from the concept of God, just as the fact that the angles of a triangle are equal to two right angles cannot be separated from the concept of a triangle"

(great mathematician and philosopher)

" Not only do we not know God except through Jesus Christ, but we also do not know ourselves without Jesus. We do not know life, death, except through Jesus. Apart from Jesus, we do not know what our life is, nor death, nor God, nor ourselves. Without the Bible, which has Jesus Christ as its object, we know nothing and see nothing but darkness and confusion in the nature of God and in our own nature."

"No one is happy like the true Christian, neither sane, nor virtuous, nor lovable"

"I lift up my hands to my deliverer, who, after being prophesied for four thousand years, came to die and die for me in the land, in the time and under the conditions that were prophesied; and by His grace I await death in peace, in the hope that I will be united with Him eternally. But I live nevertheless with joy, either in the goods that He is pleased to give me, or in the unpleasant things that He sends me for my good and that He taught me to suffer by His example"

"Nature presents perfections, to show that it is the image of God, and defects, to show that it is only his image "

(Thoughts (416) page 162, Kastaniotis editions).

R. Boyle , 1627 to 1691
(the father of analytical chemistry)

" The Gospel indeed includes and develops the entire mystery of man's redemption, as much as it is necessary for us to know in order to be saved."

"All the books of the world, even the best among them, compared with the Holy Bible, are but planets, having all their light and all their splendor from the Sun."

"The more general consideration of things is done with the light of nature and is perfected by the information of the Scriptures"

"Whatever wonderful artistry God has displayed throughout the universe, cannot be comprehended by eyes that stubbornly close and insult it by not judging what they see worthily. Animals live in the world and enjoy it; man, if he wants to do something more, must study it and despiritualize it"

"God having infinite knowledge and being the creator of our reason, it is impossible to suppose that he forces us to admit contradictions"

"It is difficult to give a satisfactory account of natural phenomena without admitting a Creator Mind"

"The consideration of the size, beauty, and regular motions of the heavenly bodies; the excellent construction of animals and plants; therefore a multitude of other phenomena of nature, and the subjection of most of them to man, lead to this as a rational creature to conclude that this great, beautiful, regular, and in many ways wonderful system of things, which we call the world, was constructed by a Creator supremely powerful, wise, and good; this can hardly be denied by an intelligent and unprejudiced scholar

Leibniz, 1646 to 1716
(mathematician and philosopher)

" God delights in odd numbers"

"Jesus Christ, the divine Founder of the purest and enlightened religion... finishing what Moses had begun, wanted the goddess not only to be the object of our fear and respect, but also of our love and affection. Thus he made people happy in advance and gave them here on earth a foretaste of future bliss. For there is nothing so pleasant as to love something worthy of love. Love is the mental disposition that makes us find pleasure in the perfections of the one we love. There is nothing more perfect than God, nothing more lovable. In order to love him, it is enough to contemplate his perfections; an easy thing, because we find within ourselves his ideas. God's perfections are those of our soul, but he possesses them without limit. It is an ocean, from which we have taken but drops. There is in us some power, some knowledge, some goodness; but they are all in God. Order, proportions, harmony excite us; examples of these are painting and music; God is all order, he always observes the accuracy of proportions, he makes universal harmony; all beauty is an outpouring of his rays" (Preface to the Theodicy Essay)

"Discourse on the agreement of faith and reason. The distinction between that which is in favor of reason, (super reason) and that which is against reason (absurdity)... For that which is against reason is against the absolutely certain and necessary truths; and that which is in favor of reason is opposed only to the ordinary facts of experience or perception. That is why I am surprised that there are people of the spirit, who fight this discrimination... It is certainly very well founded. A truth is in favor of reason, when our mind (or any created mind) cannot understand it.

And such is, in my opinion, the Holy Trinity, such are the miracles which are works of God alone, as for example the Creation... But a truth could never be contrary to reason... There are no reasons, however seemingly so, which oppose faith, that is, certainty or trust in God, by which we can and we must say that God created everything as it should be. The objections are not at all unsolvable. They contain nothing but prejudices and truisms, which are negated by reasons incomparably stronger.. We do not need to renounce reason in order to listen to faith, nor to take out our eyes to see clearly, as Queen Christina used to say; it is enough to reject our usual frivolous and superficial knowledge, when it is contrary to the mysteries. Such a rejection is not at all contrary to reason, since even in natural things we very often come out of the deception of externals through experience or through superior reasons... Faith triumphs over false reasons with strong and superior reasons, which make us let's get into it"

"It follows from the supreme perfection of God that, when he created the universe, he chose the best possible plan, which included the greatest variety, combined with the greatest possible order; the best arrangement of state, place, and time; the greatest possible effect by the simplest means; the most power, knowledge, happiness, and goodness in creatures, that the universe could contain. For, since all possible things have a right in God's understanding to exist, according to their degree of perfection, the result of all these rights must be this most perfect possible existent world". World History of Civilization, Will Durant vol. H p. 753)

" I always begin as a philosopher, but I always end as a theologian"

"I believe that it is precisely there that we must seek the origin of all existences and the laws of nature; because God always proposes to us the best and the most perfect. He does nothing by chance and is not like us, who sometimes miss the best. All those who see the wondrous structure of animals come to know the wisdom of the creator of things; and those who have some feeling of mercy and some sensibility for true philosophy, I advise them not to listen to the theories of some supposed powerful spirits, according to which we see, because we have eyes, without the eyes being made to see " (in "Metaphysical Dialogue")

" And God is a craftsman, who possesses sufficient faculties to create a machine a thousand times more intelligent than that of our body, using nothing but some simple enough fluid, which will be so constituted as to suffice the ordinary laws of nature to develop it as it should, to produce a result so wonderful; but it is true, too, that this would not happen if the creator of nature were not God."

" Thus the universe is in a way multiplied as many times as there are substances and the glory of God is multiplied in the same way by the many performances - all different - of his work. We can also say that every substance in some way carries within itself the character of God's infinite wisdom and omnipotence and that it imitates him as much as it can."

Isaac Newton, 1643 to 1727

(the " father of physics and uranium engineering ")

" He is blind who does not immediately see in the excellent and wise arrangement of beings, the infinite wisdom and goodness of the almighty Creator, and he who does not confess him is a child (=stupid)"

"God governs all things and knows all things, that are and those that may be... He is present in all places, he is more able by his will to move bodies through his unlimited and uniform sense and in this way to form and reform the parts of the universe, even as we, by our will, can move the parts of our own body" (in his work Optics)

" For it was he [God], who created them [individuals] to set them in order. And, since he did this, it is unphilosophical to look for any other Origin of the World, or to pretend that it arose out of Chaos by the Laws of Nature alone" (in his work Optics)

" This exceedingly beautiful system of the Sun, the planets, and the comets, can only come from the thought and dominion of a thinking and all-powerful being. And if the fixed stars are the centers of other, similar systems, then all these, having been created by a wise counselor, must be subject to the dominion of the One... This Being rules all, not as the soul of the world, but as Lord over all... God is omnipotent and omnipresent and through his existence everywhere and always creates time and space" (in the work Principia)

" It certainly belongs to natural philosophy, to deal with God, from the phenomena of nature ."
(in the work Principia)

" The Universe exists. Because of this existence it is presented as a miraculous event, which presupposes an infinite power within it. A whole greater than any part. A unity sustaining and composing all worlds into one. The miracle does not consist in the lack of connecting links from cause to cause, but in the very existence of the chain of phenomena. This constitutes the bottomless mystery, the indisputable miracle we know, which brings us back to the attributes of God " (in the work of "Principia" Ancient)

" In the regular motion of the planets and their satellites, in their direction, in their design, in the degree of speed of each one of them there is the stamp of some purpose, the testimony of the energy of a cause, which is not blind either nor by accident, but exceedingly skillful in mechanics and geometry. Doubt not of it. It is absurd to suppose that blind necessity rules the universe, because blind necessity, always the same, cannot produce the variety of things which we see. It is certain that the present movements of the planets cannot come from the energy of attraction alone. In order for them to take a rotational motion around the sun, they need a pair of arms to push them on the tangent of their orbits"(letter to Bentley)

From this point of view, one can say that God during the creation of the world was always present and gave it a certain arrangement. Indeed, God chose the most perfect world, i.e. that which at the same time presented the greatest simplicity and with the conditions for the richest phenomena in it, just as it would have a geometric line, which it would easily construct and whose properties would be many and admirable. With this simile I do not want to present an image of divine wisdom, which cannot be fully described and to indicate what our spirit can offer to this great truth".

"The conception that the world is a gigantic machine, which moves forward without the intervention of God, like a clock which continues to run without the watchmaker's input, is the conception of materialism and fatalism, and tends (under the guise of making the God a transcendent intellect) to exclude in reality the Divine Providence and the sovereignty of God in the world"

"I don't know how I can appear to the world. But I see myself as a child, playing on the beach and amused myself by finding now and then, a smoother pebble or a prettier shell than usual, while the great ocean of truth stretches before me completely unexplored."

"If I have seen farther than other men, it is because I have stood on the shoulders of giants"

"Physics, beware of Metaphysics"

" Here lies Isaac Newton, - who with his great spirit explored planets, - the orbits of comets, the floods of the seas. - He was the first to analyze light rays - and of colors he gave exquisite images. - Physin also studied, ancient writings - and diligently invested in Holy Scriptures. - With his life, his works he showed us the way, - how to honor the divine forger - believe in the Gospel, holy book. - Joy to the race of mortals to have such ornaments » (Inscription on Newton's tomb).

Benjamin Franklin, 1706 to 1790

(inventor of the lightning rod and American politician)

" With the help of God I have been brought up during the long period of my life in such a way that no one has the right to say: Benjamin Franklin wronged me"

"We have lost a parent, a priceless and dear friend. But this is the will of God; that our bodies should be rejected, when the soul is to enter into true life. Our existence on earth is barely worthy of the name life... Why should we not rejoice, then, when a new person is called to eternity, to become a member of the happy society of the immortals?"

"There lies the body of Benjamin Franklin, printer, like the cover of an old book, with its leaves torn, its letters and gilding effaced, worm-eaten. But the text of the book will not be lost, because it will appear, as he believes, in a new edition, more beautiful, corrected and revised by the Poet" (words on his epitaph which he wrote himself)

"No, I advise you to cultivate your acquaintance with the Holy Bible and to believe unscrupulously in its teachings. This is in your safe interest"

" Gentlemen! Let us pray. I have reached a great age, and the longer I live, the more clearly I see that the cause of mankind is directed by God... How can a country be supported and strengthened without His help? The Holy Bible assures us that, unless the Lord builds a house, the builders have labored in vain"

Herschel William, 1738 έως 1822

(astronomer who discovered many satellites of planets)

"The more the field of science expands, the more numerous are the proofs of the existence of an all-powerful, all-wisdom, Creator".

Laplace P, 1749 to 1827

(French astronomer and mathematician)

" What we know is a very small thing, but what we ignore is a maximum! (he wrote it above his bed)

" the larger and wider the area of exploration becomes, the more the frontiers of the unknown grow" (quoted by G. Gamow)

" I pray to God to guard your life. Keep Him always present in your mind, like your father and your mother..." (letter to his son 7/17/1809).

" The probability of such an event (=creation by chance) is one in trillions of possible cases. The solar system is not the result of chance, which is much more likely than most historical events."

"Such phenomena, so extraordinary, cannot have arisen by chance. Mathematically calculating the probability of these we find that this probability is one in 200 trillion possible cases at least. Therefore these are not the result of chance, which is a far greater probability than most historical events about which no one doubts. Therefore we must believe, at least with equal conviction, that some cause directed the motions of the planets."

(great English chemist and physicist, the father of electrochemistry)

" In my youth I was a skeptic. I think this is the case with most young people who have studied and discussed a little and become accustomed to putting some mathematical twist in their way of thinking. But observing the nature of the mental qualities of animals compared with those of man, and examining the wonders of instinct, I became a believer. The idea came to me one day that instinct has been superseded in man by the energy of God in our souls, and with this conviction faith was still more strengthened... The true chemist sees the energy of God in all the various forms of the external world ».

"I envy no one for any gift of heart or mind, whether it be called genius, or ability and imagination. But if I had to choose, I would prefer to all other gifts the faith of a godly heart. It makes life a school of holiness, it creates new hopes, and when all earthly hope is lost, it sheds its bright rays upon the withering and destruction of earthly existence. It is faith that causes life from death and song from the ruins.

Faith can make torture and the cross of shame guides to heaven; even where the sensualist and the coward see only darkness, destruction, and despair, faith can fill the spirit with the foretaste of a world of peace and of eternal joy, towards whom the phalanx of the victorious and the blessed is marching under palm trees and amaranths."

JB Lamarck, 1744 to 1829'

" Man, if we consider only his body, it would be possible to descend from the superior apes, who are therefore called humanoid, but his reason raises him much higher than the intelligent animals, gives him a special position and proves that the descent it is different from that of animals".

"They said that nature is God. Strange thing! They confused the watch and the watchmaker, the project and the craftsman. Certainly this idea is consistent and has no depth. The power which created nature has no undoubted limits, cannot be subjected to its will, and is independent of all law. He alone can change nature and his laws; He alone can annihilate them."

"Nature without being an intellect, without being a being, but an order of things which constitute a force everywhere subject to laws, nature, I say, is not God. It is the wonderful product of His all-powerful will... The man who studies the play of natural forces admires, so to speak, the divine movements, because the will of God is everywhere expressed in the execution of the laws of nature, insofar as these laws originate from Him" .

Gauss, K. Gauss, 1777 to 1855

(considered by some the greatest mathematician of all time)

"There is in this world the pleasure of the mind, which is satisfied in science, and the pleasure of the heart, which relieves man from toils and sufferings. But if it is supposed that the work of the supreme Being is to bring creatures into existence, to cultivate these pleasures and to disappear after 80 or 90 years, the plan would be pitiful. Suppose the soul lived 80 or 90 thousand years. If it was ever going to disappear, that time span is a mere moment, since it will eventually pass. And yet our soul tends towards immortality and infinity. From this one must accept the opinion in favor of which, apart from the strict scientific foundation, so many others advocate; namely, that apart from this material world, there is also a purely spiritual world, destined to give us the satisfaction of our noblest and strongest appeals. And of this world we will become shareholders".

"I wish you well, my dear. The dream we call life must be sweeter to you. To be a foretaste of true life in our own homeland, where the living spirit will not carry the chain of the body, the vessel of space, the scourge of earthly pains and where it will not be pressed by the temptations of our petty needs and desires .

Let us bravely and ungrudgingly bear the burden to the end, never forgetting that higher end. We shall be full of joy, when the last hours of our life shall mean, to lay down the burden, and see everything perishable depart from us .'

THE EVOLUTION IN NATURE

Charles Darwin, 1809 to 1882.

" The question of whether there is a Creator Ruler of the Universe is entirely separate. And to this question the great spirits who lived throughout the ages answer affirmatively " (in " On the Origin of Man ").

" Both (acts) of generation, both of species and of individuals, are, quite in the same way, parts of that great logical series of events, which the mind cannot in any way receive and as a result of blind chance" (in The Descent of Man).

"..." (the Origin of Species, vol. 2, p. 207).

"The issue of my religious beliefs is important only to me. But since you ask me, I answer that on this matter my opinions change many times. Whether one should be called "theist" depends on the meaning we give to that word; but not even in the time of my greatest swings was I an atheist, that is, a man who denies the existence of God."
(written response to the August Gazette in 1883).

(great chemist and biologist)

" God willed that through my persistent work I should add a small stone to the building of our knowledge on the deep mysteries of life and death" (letter to his father)

" The more I engage in the study of nature, the more I am amazed at the works of the Creator. During the work in my laboratory I pray"

"Science ought to be confined to the observation of facts, and not to leap beyond the circle of reality; but I cannot understand why the adherents of positive philosophy strive to exclude from the study of the human mind, the most important of all facts, the most positive of all knowledges, the idea of the Infinite... The height of human actions depends on the ideas from which they were inspired. Happy is, he who carries within him the divine, the idea of good, the ideal of art, science, the ideal of the virtues of the Gospel. These are the living sources of great works, which are illuminated by the rays of the Infinite... I wonder in the name of what new philosophical or scientific discovery can we eradicate from the human soul these high preoccupations? I consider them eternal (on 4-27-1882)

" The day will come when they will laugh at the stupidity of contemporary philosophy"

" The automatic generation of microscopic beings is a chimera. No! Today there is no known case in which we can confirm that tiny beings came into the world without seeds and parents to they were similar to these beings. Those who assert the existence of automatic generation have been deceived by their imaginations, or deceived by ill-conceived experiments, in which there were errors which they could not perceive or which they could not avoid.'

"All alive from the living"

"Science should not worry at all about the philosophical consequences of its work".

- If, by the progress of my experimental investigations, I succeeded in proving that matter can organize itself into a cell or an embryonic being, I would at once proclaim it with the justified pride of an inventor, who has a clear conscience, that he has done a great thing discovery.

-And if I were challenged I would add: so much the worse for those whose principles, theories and systems do not agree with the truth of natural facts! It was with this same pride that I told you a little while ago, rejecting the efforts of my opponents to refute my conclusions: In the present state of science the theory of automatic generation is a chimera. And with the same independence of opinion I add: so much the worse for those whose philosophical or political principles are hindered by my studies!"

" science has neither religion nor country" inscription about which Pasteur said: "If science has neither religion nor country, scientists have both religion and country"

"I would gladly give all my glory as a scientist for a crumb of the glory of Antony the Great, who could not even read."

Thomas Edison, 1847 to 1931

(American inventor and businessman. Among his best-known inventions are the microphone, the phonograph and the electric light bulb)

" We haven't even begun to understand one percent of ninety-nine percent of anything"

G. Marconi, 1874 to 1937
(1909 Nobel Prize for wireless telegraphy)

" Science alone cannot explain many things, and above all the greatest of all mysteries, the mystery of our existence. Who we are; Where do we come from? What do we come to life for? From the moment when man began to think, he devoted himself to the investigation of these problems, and yet they remain unsolved to this day. I proudly proclaim that I am a believer. I believe in the power of prayer. I believe in this not only as a faithful Christian, but at the same time as a scientist"

"Every man of science knows that there are unsolved mysteries. Only faith in a Higher Being, faith which demands our obedience, gives us courage to bravely undertake the study of life's secrets. With the help of God, who places such mysterious forces of nature at the disposal of humanity, I was able to prepare this instrument, which gives the faithful of the whole world the opportunity to hear the words of the Holy Father (=the Pope) "
(during the installation of a Radio Station in the Vatican on 12-2-1931)

When Marconi introduced short waves into radio broadcasting, the first phrases broadcast were: " Thy will be done - deliver us from the wicked."

Wernher von Braun, 1912 to 1977
(the famous rocket manufacturer)

" And this beautiful planet, Earth, is just as much a part of God's kingdom as the empty spaces around us, as well as all the other stars and planets in the universe. He instilled in our hearts curiosity about the worlds around us and He enabled us to acquire the scientific knowledge and technical ability to satisfy it. If God really wanted us to remain on earth, I am sure, he would have set up an insurmountable barrier and discouraged all our efforts to overcome it. But there is no evidence of a barrier... He entrusted to man the whole creation.'

"I believe that space exploration will improve man's existence on earth, morally and spiritually. The more we learn about Creation, the more we will know about the Creator. The spirit of man is imbued with a thirst for ultimate truth, and the exploration of Space represents the human mind, working at the zenith of its knowledge. As our knowledge of the workings of the vast and majestic Universe increases, it is only possible that our respect for its Creator also increases ", (interview 1967 in Greece).

" Science and religion are not rivals, but sisters. Both delve into the ultimate truth. Science helps to reveal more about the Creator through his Creation... The more we delve into the exploration of Space, the greater our faith grows... »

" Whatever man works in the scientific world, nothing can succeed without it of faith. If faith has advanced and helped anyone in life, look to me."

"Of course there are times of doubt and confusion and I wonder if I'm on the right path. In these cases I draw strength as I ask and receive help from God"

"I know that no scientific invention will necessarily bring about a change in the relationship between God and man. A scientist sees the seal of God everywhere he looks

"The reason why I believe in God is clear. Everything in the world is made with order and organization and presupposes a maker, a designer. The Universe contains so much order, so much perfection and precision that it cannot but be the result of a divine design.

There must surely be a Creator behind it.

-For me there is no other way" (in response to a question from the New York Journal American).

Sir Fred Hoyle, 1915 to 2001

(famous English astronomer, he was not religious)

"To avoid the question of creation it would be necessary for all the matter in the Universe to be of infinite age, which cannot be the case...Hydrogen is constantly changing into helium and other elements...How then is it that the Universe consists, almost entirely, of hydrogen? If matter were of infinite age, this would be completely impossible. Therefore we find that, since the Universe has these characteristics, it is not possible to bypass the question of creation " (in "The Nature of the Universe")

" A common-sense interpretation of the data suggests that some super-intelligence has played with physics, as well as chemistry and biology, and that there are no blind forces in nature that are appreciable. The numbers that emerge from the data calculation seem to me so staggering that they almost put this possibility out of the question. (Hoyle, F. 1982. The Universe: Past and Present Reflections. Annual Review of Astronomy and Astrophysics, 20 paragraph 16).

" I don't believe there is a scientist who would look at the clues about the consequences of the laws of nuclear physics on the formation of a star's interior and not conclude that they were designed on purpose. If this is the case, then my seemingly random tricks are part of a deeper plan. If not, then we are back again at the beginning of a monstrous sequence of random events " (cited in Barrow and Tipler, Principle, page 22).

Heisenberg Werner 1901-1975,

(one of the world's greatest contemporary physicists, proponent of the " uncertainty principle ". Nobel Prize 1932 for the creation of Quantum Mechanics)

- " Since the time of Galileo's famous trial, the concept has been constantly expressed that the scientific truth that emerges from the natural sciences cannot be combined with the religious interpretation of the world. But although I am fully convinced that the truth, which in its sphere, is formulated by natural science, cannot be attacked, yet I have never been able to reject religious belief, even as a part of an outmoded belief of mankind, a part which we must forego for the future. Thus, during my life, I have always had to think about the relationship between these two spiritual worlds of Faith and Science. Because I could never doubt the truth of what these two worlds show us...

The God of whom we are now speaking, is a God of order, and we cannot say that he is the only God to whom we turn in our sorrows and on whom we lean our lives. Or, perhaps we can say, that the scientific method directs our attention to one part of the divine activity and for this there is a danger of losing the great coherence of the whole, the picture of the totality of the Universe (in a speech in 1973) "

- " The first taste from the glass of Physics looks like atheism, but at the bottom of the glass God is waiting"

Francis Crick, 1916 to 2004

(English biologist Nobel Prize 1962, declared atheist)

" There is some higher power which directs the life and behavior of animal systems and which cannot be explained by our scientific beliefs."

Robert Jastrow , 1925 to 2008
(Astronomer physical cosmologist)

" It is not a matter of another year, another decade of work, another measurement or another theory. At the moment it seems that Science will never be able to lift the veil of the mystery of creation"

"For the scientist who has lived by faith in the power of reason, history ends like a bad dream.

He has climbed the mountain of ignorance.

He is ready to conquer the highest peak.

And as he climbs the last rock, he is greeted by a group of theologians, who have been sitting there for centuries!

(Robert Jastrow, Cod and the Astronomers, Warner books, April 1980, page 105).

Weizsaecker C, Weizsaecker Karolos , 1920 to 2015
(astrophysical)

"... We were struggling, because we all have anxieties and worries. We should have no anxiety. When the Paraclete comes, the Spirit of truth, he will lead us all into all truth. This happens every day between us; it can happen, if we open up. And it happens. In this world you will have trouble, but you will be comforted, because I have overcome the world. This is a fact " (in a 1974 Temple speech)

" Today's science, as science, knows what it does not know. That is why science is restrained and cautious before general opinions referring to the essence of all beings... We have before us a supreme scientific position, in which, to be honest, science also means that no one knows. We ask questions, to which we have to admit, that, as we think scientifically today, we could not answer"

"For me Christianity really is not a teaching about theism, or anything like that, but primarily it is the Lord's Sermon on the Mount. If one turns to this sermon, he might say, he is trying to be a Christian."

Georgios Paxinos , the internationally renowned Greek neuroscientist (he publicly declared himself an atheist)

Here are some characteristic excerpts from the speech of "Know thyself", in 2017 in Athens:

" There are three great unanswered questions concerning the Universe:

-How did the Big Bang happen?

-How was the first cell created and

-How matter acquired consciousness of existence, that is, how this table realized that it exists and began to fall in love...etc"

"Science will never prove that there is no soul"

"If the mind rules the brain, then there is freedom of will and, consequently, dignity and responsibility. If conversely the brain rules the mind, then a stormy conclusion follows, there is no free will, no praise, no blame, no hell."

"For 'knowing him', it is worth knowing whether we are slaves to our genes and our environment, slaves to yesterday or, conversely, architects of our destiny"

"The best term to describe neuroscientists who study consciousness, mind and free will is "confused". They don't know what happens to consciousness"

"For what I am going to tell you, most scientists embrace it, but it is possible that the minority is right... In science, nothing is almost ever proven..."

- Take the people who dedicated their lives and gave us many things in religion, the Prophets, Apostles, Saints, take anyone you want and put them all together and tell me, how beautifully they describe what they conceive of the divine. I would say that all these are small, close to the greatness of God's Creation, which modern Science has reopened before us. Science illuminates the majesty of God!"

Note: Einstein clearly stated that he did not believe in a personal God in the Christian sense.

" Everything is determined... by forces beyond our control. They are defined for the insect as for the star. People, plants or cosmic dust - all dance to the mysterious purpose played by some invisible piper from afar"

"I assert that secular religious sentiment is the strongest and noblest motive of scientific inquiry"

"The scientist is possessed by a sense of universal causality... His religious feeling takes the form of ecstatic astonishment before the harmony of the natural world, where an intelligence so superior is revealed that, in comparison with it, the whole of systematic thought and the actions of human beings seem utterly insignificant... This sentiment is undoubtedly analogous to that possessed by the religious geniuses of all ages"

"What is the meaning of human life or the life of every creature? the answer to the question belongs to religion. One might wonder. Does it make sense to ask such a question? my answer is that the man who considers life meaningless, his own and that of his fellow men, is not only unhappy but also unworthy of life."

" Anyone who is seriously involved in science is convinced that ultimately in the laws of the universe a mind far superior to the mind of man manifests itself... So the enpreoccupation with science leads to a special religious feeling which is really very different from the religiosity of some more naive man.'

"Relativity is a purely scientific matter and has nothing to do with religion."

"It's hard to peek at God's cards. But I can't believe for a moment that he would choose to play dice with the world."

"One thing I have learned in my long life: our whole science, when compared with reality, seems primitive and childish, and yet it is the most precious thing we have."

*"Physical concepts are free creations of the mind and do not necessarily arise, as is often thought, from our relations with the outside world. In our attempt to understand reality we are like someone trying to understand the mechanism of a closed clock. He sees the outside: the plaque, the moving pointers, hears the tick-tock, but inside he cannot enter. If he has any skill he will, perhaps, devise some mechanism, by which the clock works, which he sees, but he will never be sure, that his ideas are unique, by which his observations are explained. For, he will never be able to test his ideas against actual mechanisms' (Einstein, L. Infeld, Die Evolution der Physik (1987), 40).*

" I have never found anything in my science that I can oppose to Religion."

So far as the laws of mathematics refer to reality they are not certain, and so far as they are certain they do not refer to reality"

"Serious ministers of science are the only deeply religious people" (in Religion and Science page 40).

HAPPINESS

Editing of the article THE RAIN

By Filareti Lefterioti

(p.123)

The sound of the first drops gently pattering on the window. I immediately recognize the melody of the rain, this favorite companionship of mine. A sense of anticipation and the energy of adventure flood through me. Although we are getting ready to go for a walk, the sky decided to reserve us a sudden gift: the dance of raindrops.

Two roads unfold before us, two options to choose from. We can react with irritation and frustration, crush our spirits, and let bad moods suffocate us, imprisoned within the square walls of our emotional warehouse. Or, we can accept the rain, open our arms, grab an umbrella, and continue our walk with joy, even if the drops touch us.

In the end, the rain represents all those difficulties and unexpected moments that we encounter in our life. The umbrellas, on the other hand, are the choices we make, our reactions and the attitudes we choose to have in the face of these difficulties.

The message that the rain gives us is simple and profound. We are the ones who determine our happiness. Happiness does not depend on external circumstances, but on our internal reaction and acceptance. When we open our umbrella and step out into the rain, we prove that we are capable of embracing difficulties and continuing to enjoy life despite obstacles.

Thus, in our hands lies the responsibility to face life with all its challenges. If we are disappointed by rain and choose to stay inside, blaming the weather or the world around us, then we limit ourselves and let opportunities and moments that could bring us joy and happiness go to waste. On the contrary, when we accept the rain and choose to move forward, despite the unexpected, we express our strength and flexibility to face the challenges and benefit from the experience that is offered to us.

In fact, the world around us, the "rain", is not responsible for how we feel. We ourselves bear the responsibility for our reaction and our choice to enjoy or deny happiness. With simple steps and changes in our inner attitude, we can live with simplicity and humility, appreciate the present and enjoy our journey with pleasure.

So, let's open the umbrella of acceptance, gratitude and optimism, and go out into the rain of life with a smile on our face.

Let us not reject the opportunity to be part of the world, but let us accept it and contribute to the understanding and well-being of those around us.

Let us become sensitive to the needs of others and offer our help, even if we face difficulties.

Let us remember that our life is not only the moments that define our happiness, but it is the total experience consisting of joys and sorrows.

Let us accept uncertainty and adversity as a part of human existence and face these challenges with fortitude and courage.

Ultimately, happiness does not depend on the weather, but on our inner mood and our choice to be open to the beauty and poetry of life, even in the moments of rain.

Let us decide to be happy, regardless of external circumstances, and let our own inner brightness shine through even in the darkest of times.

Let us realize that happiness is not a temporary state that depends on external events, but a life choice.

When we decide to accept the rain and face the inevitable changes and upheavals, we discover the power of flexibility and adaptability. We find beauty in the simplicity of letting the rain touch us, feeling the drops fall on us and allowing ourselves to integrate into the rhythm of nature.

Upheavals and hardships can teach us a lot about our human resilience and inner strength. With each challenge we face, we discover more of ourselves, strengthen our flexibility and develop a sense of self-confidence.

So let's leave the umbrella of reaction aside, open the umbrella of acceptance and accept all life's challenges to truly live today too..!

SPIRITUALITY

The conclusion of this book

Our stay in this world is a real challenge, a school of difficulties that aims to teach us the " good " formation of our soul, our consciousness and our " ego ". We live in a world where evil prevails, but we have the ability, freely, to reject it or choose it. Through this process, we learn to shape ourselves, on our own, towards good and not towards evil..!

As we read these words, we can ask ourselves: What is the true meaning of our lives? Who are we really and what is our role in this world?

This article challenges us to focus on our inner state, explore our spiritual aspect and seek harmony with ourselves and the highest dimension of our being.

These realizations pave the way for a different approach to life. They call us to reject evil and choose good, to approach love and truth and to improve our inner spiritual growth. Through this inner search, we can discover our true nature and achieve a deeper connection with the universe and ourselves.

This approach challenges us to release our limited ego and recognize our true essence as an inexhaustible source of love and empathy. Through this connection with our inner spirituality, we can experience a unified and harmonious relationship with ourselves, others and the world around us.

Therefore, let us explore this opportunity given to us, by this book, STONE HEARTS, for inner growth and spiritual evolution. Let us seek to achieve a deeper meaning and purpose in our lives, drawing on the wisdom and unity that our empathy offers us. Let us realize that our spiritual aspect is the guide to our true happiness and well-being.

Through spiritual growth, we can free ourselves from limiting beliefs and negative habits that prevent us from living a full and authentic life.

As we explore our inner journey, we discover that our spiritual aspect is a source of strength and unity. We gain self-awareness, realizing our connection to something greater than ourselves. We develop trust in our inner voice and the wisdom that resides within us.

Through the practice of spirituality, we discover the inexhaustible source of love, mercy and empathy that exists within us. By building on this connection, we can enrich our lives and positively influence those around us.

So let's explore our inner spirituality and develop a conscious relationship with ourselves and everything around us. Let us seek to find inner peace and balance through the practice of dialogue with our inner world.

Through dialogue, we can release our emotional reactions and develop a more open and tolerant attitude towards ourselves and of others. This allows us to accept the complexity of human existence and find solutions, amidst the contradictions that surround us.

Let us be open to developing our spiritual side and constantly seek wisdom, truth and authenticity in our lives. Let's strengthen our connection with the world and those around us, maintaining our sensitivity and respect for all beings.

Let's live with purpose and passion, incorporating spirituality into our daily lives. Thus, we will create a more balanced and happy lifestyle.

Spirituality helps us discover empathy and unity with the universe, find our inner strength and achieve harmony in all aspects of our lives.

Through the practice of dialogue and the search for our spiritual truth, we release our creativity and energy, promoting our personal growth and well-being. We understand that life is a continuous spiritual journey, filled with opportunities for learning, growth and development.

So let's engage in spiritual practices like dialogue through study, tour, prayer, dialogical listening and the practice of gratitude. Let's spend time searching for our inner truth and connecting with something greater than ourselves.

Spirituality unites us with other people and with our surroundings. We recognize interdependence with the world around us and seek active participation and interaction with culture, nature and humanity.

Through spirituality, we express love, conscientiousness and compassion towards others. We seek the common good to contribute to the well-being and happiness, not only of ourselves, but also of others.

Spirituality also encourages us to be open to change and growth. We recognize that life is a continuous learning path and strive to enrich our understanding and develop our skills through continuous learning and self-improvement.

Therefore, spirituality provides us with direction, meaning and inspiration in our lives, allows us to connect with the core of our being and discover our inner strength and well-being. Through dialogue with ourselves, we can explore our beliefs, our values and our personal growth.

In addition, spirituality enables us to face life's difficulties and adversities with flexibility and endurance. We develop our inner human strength and feel confident in facing and solving challenges.

Finally, spirituality enhances our sense of unity and connection with the world around us. We recognize our mutual dependence on planet earth and other living organisms, and promote sustainable behavior and environmental protection for the well-being of all.

In conclusion, spirituality is a multidimensional experience that we seek to enrich our lives. Through it, we discover the deepest meaning and purpose of our existence, develop our inner sensitivity and perceive ourselves and the world in new ways.

On the other hand, in modern times, spirituality is a way of self-awareness and self-development, while at the same time it allows us to connect with others and create relationships based on love, altruism and solidarity.

Thus, through spirituality, we enrich our existence and create a more conscious and empowering lifestyle. We open the door to personal transformation, become aware of the beauties of the world and people around us, and develop a deeper unity with ourselves and our environment.

Spirituality is not limited to specific practices or beliefs, but is a constant traveling companion in our lives. It can be manifested through the practice of study, the search for inner peace, through future transformation, the evolution of our personal principles and values, as well as through connection with the world around us and our contribution to the common good.

In the end, spirituality guides us to seek truth and well-being, to recognize the connections between all beings, and to empathize with our fellow human beings.

Our spiritual path can lead us to greater awareness, inner peace and harmony, with the world around us. We develop the strength to face challenges and obstacles with fortitude and determination, inspired by our inner light and our connection to something greater than ourselves!

Spirituality is a personal traveling companion that is constantly evolving as we grow and develop our awareness. Everyone has their own way of seeking and expressing their spirituality. It can be through the practice of study and discernment, immersion in religious traditions, and our connection to nature.

Spirituality is a personal experience and each of us can seek it and express it in our own way. It is important to commit to this process, discover what interests and inspires us, and open our hearts and minds to new ideas and experiences.

Through this exploration, we can find meaning, inspiration and blessing in our lives and develop a more conscious and balanced presence in the world!

LOVE

The Fascinating Mystery of the Human Existence

Kinds of love

1. Love in man
2. Universal love
3. The hereafter
4. The supreme love

Prologue

Love, that intense feeling of affection and personal devotion, is an archetype that pervades human existence and prompts many philosophical and spiritual pursuits.

In this article, we will explore the concept of love for man and for the Universe as a whole!

1. Love in man

Beyond our simple, everyday feeling, love reveals a deeper dimension of human existence, connecting man to God and himself to others.

In philosophy, love emerges as a virtue that symbolizes human kindness, compassion and affection.

It is the force that leads man towards spiritual growth and unity with the world. At the same time, love is a central element in many religions, as God is the embodiment of love. In the Christian tradition, the phrase "God is love" expresses the idea that love is the essence of God and the source from which all creation flows.

In addition, love is also manifested through the noble relationship of friendship and devotion between people. Friendship is a special form of love based on mutual understanding, trust and support. Through friendship, people experience true connection and mutual devotion, giving and receiving love, in its most selfless form.

Also, love manifests itself through romantisme, which is an intense emotional and sexual attraction that pervades relationships between the sexes. It represents the desire for unity, through a mutual attraction and understanding.

Love can also be described as an action towards others based on sympathy and kindness. Acts of noble behavior, interest and care for the other derive from love. These acts may be expressed through help, encouragement, support, or even through a simple gesture of friendliness.

However, love presents a multitude of different emotions, states, and behaviors. Each person has their own interpretation and experience of love, and this leads to a variety of opinions and approaches.

It can include, romantic love, passion and love between lovers, platonic love which is devotion and sensitivity in friendships, love for family and relatives, altruistic love for other people and love for the divine or the spiritual.

At its core, love is a force that unites people and things in the world. It is an energetic and creative force that promotes its interaction, solidarity and unity. Once love acquires consciousness and free will in man, it becomes the strongest expression of human nature and existence itself.

In general, love is a matter of endless search and exploration. As people evolve, they continue to search for the true nature of love, discovering new aspects and deepening their understanding. Love is an eternal mystery that permeates human existence and poetry, art and philosophy.

In each new generation, love takes new forms and discovers new ways of expression. It may be manifested through technology and social networks, but it always remains a human feeling that connects souls and hearts.

Love is the force that unites us and guides us in the formation of our relationships, our communication and the way we deal with the world around us. Through love, we discover our true nature and express our humanity.

So let us love with sincerity and devotion, let us give and receive love, creating a wave of solidarity and hope that will embrace every corner of the world.

Let us treat each other with respect and understanding, keeping alive the flame of true humanity within us.

Let us embrace the diversity of the world, recognizing that love knows no boundaries and limitations.

Let us bring out our good and noble side, creating an environment of unity and peace.

In every act of love, we open our hearts and let the light of hope shine into the world.

Let us be a source of love and inspiration for those around us, creating a better and more humane world.

In the end, love is the power that can change the world.

Let love guide us and unite our hearts, creating a future full of hope and peace.

Let's let love blossom in our daily life, become the guide for our choices and our actions.

Let us face the world with an open mind and a heart full of love, making room for the growth and well-being of others.

With love, we can create a society where tolerance and compassion reign supreme.

In the end, love is the most precious gift we can give and receive.

2. Universal love

Universal love refers to the highest form of love, which transcends personal boundaries and unites everything in the Universe. It is the recognition of the unity and interdependence of all forms of existence.

Universal love is expressed through a sense of a deeper connection with all creation. It is the recognition that every being, from the smallest to the largest, has its own value and contributes to the wonderful dance of life.

Through Universal love, we recognize the interdependence of energy and material flows in the Universe. We understand that every action and every decision we make affects the whole, as if we were a breath of a great organism.

Universal love encourages us to act with respect and sensitivity towards nature, its creatures and our fellow human beings. It unites us in a consciousness of like-mindedness and solidarity. We feel a responsibility to care for and protect the environment, to contribute to peace and justice, and to promote prosperity and unity among all mankind.

Through Universal love, we realize that we are a small but important part of a grand plan. We understand that our happiness and well-being are intertwined with the happiness and well-being of the Universe. Therefore, we take responsibility to act with wisdom and conscientiousness, promoting evolution and harmony at all levels of the Universe.

At an essential level, Universal love calls us to discover and reveal the core of truth and the love that dwells within us. Deep within our being, we recognize the oneness of all forms of existence and our connection to the universal web of life. We feel the pain and joy of others as our own pain and joy. With an open heart, we break through the barriers of the ego and embrace the diversity and rich variety of life.

Universal love encourages us to experience oneness with nature and all beings around us.

We realize that our connections are much deeper and more complex than we can imagine.

As we embrace Universal love, we show our gratitude and respect for everyone's existence and contribution, helping to foster unity and harmony on an individual, social and cosmic level.

Universal love acquired a consciousness of existence and became the man destined to be deified, to become in the image and likeness of God!

The idea that man was created in God's image refers to a divine creative act where God gives man the ability to reflect His attributes, such as love, wisdom, creativity and justice. In this context, Universal love is considered as one of its aspects of divine nature that man can express and develop.

From a philosophical point of view, the idea that man can be made in the image and likeness of God refers to the attainment of the highest human reality. This entails the attainment of a unified consciousness and harmony with the Cosmic Spirit, as well as the manifestation of the divine virtues.

When man develops his inner nature and expresses Universal love through his behavior and actions, he demonstrates his ability to perceive and express his divine orientation. By achieving this state, man participates in the creation and continuous evolution of the World, enhancing the harmony and well-being of the Universe.

In any case, the idea of divine likeness, highlights the possibility of man to pursue and develop the highest spiritual and moral values. Through Universal love and striving for self-awareness and spiritual growth, man can reach an inner state that reflects the divine within him and live in conscious unity with the Universe.

Through the deepening of his inner consciousness and his connection with the essence of All, man discovers his spiritual nature and acquires a broader sense of reality.

Through Universal love and his connection with God, man can bring forth his inner light and play a role as an active creator and guardian of the Universe.

Through simplicity, compassion, true connection with others and the offering of love and devotion, man can express his divine nature and contribute to the well-being and evolution of the Universe.

At the core of this idea is the belief that Universal love is the driving force that permeates and connects everything in the Universe, uniting the human nature with the divine and strengthening the mutual bond and interdependence of all forms of existence.

Through Universal love, man can recognize and respect the presence of the divine in every being and maintain harmonious relationship with nature, other people, and the wider world.

Through Universal love, man can recognize and respect the presence of the divine in every being and maintain a harmonious relationship with nature, other people, and the wider world.

Universal love seeks to embody the principles of unity, cooperation and solidarity, shaping an environment where peace and prosperity become a reality for all beings.

Through the empowerment of Universal love, through the achievement of harmony and balance on all levels of existence, man can contribute to the creation of a more coherent, conscious and prosperous Universe.

Therefore, Universal love represents the cosmic force, which unites everything in the Universe and forms unity and harmony.

Since the beginning of time, humanity has sought to achieve this unity, that is, union with the world and the divine.

Through Universal love, man develops the awareness of his interdependence with everything and the recognition of our common origin and destiny.

He realizes that his happiness and well-being are interconnected with that of the environment and all the beings that make it up.

Through the act of Universal love, man highlights his restraint and self-sacrifice, treats solidarity as a fundamental value of life and embraces the idea of justice and peace, as important elements of human society for the coexistence of its members.

Thus Universal love shapes man as an expressive force of love and creation in the Universe. Man, by his active participation in the evolution and development of the world around him, expresses his divine nature and is connected to the eternal creative force that permeates all beings.

Through Universal love, man brings out his inner brightness and expresses his heart, reshaping himself and the world around him with love, creativity and sensitivity.

From the activation of Universal love within him, man becomes a means of fulfilling the cosmic plan, contributing to the development and well-being of the Universal Vision.

Through love and unity with the Universe, man becomes an active partner with the divine forces, helping to lead humanity and the world to a higher consciousness and unity. Man, acting from his position " in the image and likeness of God" , assumes responsibility for the evolution and well-being of all beings.

Through Universal love, man realizes that he is part of a greater and harmonious creation and that his true happiness depends on the happiness of others. Therefore, he highlights interdependence and solidarity as key values and practices in his life.

Man, inspired by Universal love, seeks wisdom and unity with the divine, uniting his spiritual inner world with his outer world. In this quest, he discovers the limitless power of Love, which leads to the liberation of himself from selfishness, limited thinking and divisions that create distance between himself and others.

Through Universal love, man develops his sensitivity to the needs and pain of others, expresses true compassion and a loving attitude towards all forms of life.

He realizes that the essence of God and Love is found in every creature and offers his love and attention to their growth, well-being and strengthening.

With Universal love as a guiding principle, man realizes his oneness with all beings and the Universe, and assumes responsibility for their protection, preservation and development. From universal unity and love emerges the true nature of man.

Universal love in man shows that he lives eternally destined to reach the divine nature. Through this love, man seeks to achieve a unity with the divine and express his true nature.

As he develops spiritually and discovers truth through love, man begins to incorporate divine principles and values into his life. In the course of this evolution, he discovers his true self and connects it to the cosmic dance of creation.

With his progress, man opens up to the dimensions of the spirit and the soul, perceives the unbiased love of the Universe and his union with the divine. As he deepens his connection with the divine nature, he realizes that his perspective is the expansion of the love and light of the Universe.

Man's destiny is to develop into a truly divine man, radiating God's light, wisdom and love to the world. This divine man is a creator and a benefactor of the Universe, contributing to the welfare and evolution of all beings.

Through Universal love and unity with the divine spirit, man acquires the ability to create a new reality, a reality of love, peace and harmony.

Through his connection with the divine spirit, he recognizes the omnipotence of the One and discovers His creative power and the inexhaustible source of love and energy!

When man, by his deification, realizes the embodiment of Universal love, he becomes a channel for the diffusion of divine light and love in the world and identifies unity with existence.

Love is a spiritual light that pierces the dark density of mortal existence and brings forth the immortal within us.

3. The hereafter

Ultimately, love proves that there is no death, but a continuous and eternal existence. Love transcends the boundaries of the physical world and connects beings in a spiritual and active bond.

When we express love, we create an energy that lasts forever. Love is the force that breaks through the limitation of time and space, allowing us to connect with loved ones who have left the physical world.

Death may seem like the end of life in the physical world, but love shows that death is simply a transition to a new form of existence.

Rather than being the end, death becomes a settlement, a transition to a higher dimension of existence.

Through love, we realize that our loved ones do not disappear, but continue to exist.

The connections we create with our loved ones last beyond physical time and continue to accompany us forever.

Love allows us to feel the presence and influence of those we love, even if they are not physically present.

Through the realization of this eternal connection, we realize that love is a source of hope and comfort, as it reminds us that our loved ones still exist and support us. Therefore, love subverts the concept of death and gives us the certainty that life continues in new forms and manifestations.

Love is a symbol of immortality and reminds us that our spiritual reality transcends physical limitations. Through this spiritual unity, we experience a sense of eternity with the Universe.

Therefore, love brings out our true nature as spiritual beings and gives us the belief that our existence is not limited to our physical life here on Earth.

Love unites us with eternity and allows us to perceive the presence of our loved ones even after death.

After the death of the body, souls are united by love, eternally. This unity of souls transcends the boundaries of the physical world and continues to develop and enrich itself to a higher level of spiritual existence.

Through love, souls continue to communicate, share experiences and connect with others. Love knows no limitations of time or space, but extends eternally beyond the limits of material reality.

This unity of souls is maintained through their love and interaction. Souls continue to evolve, learn and grow together, through forming a boundless community of love and wisdom.

Love is the bond that unites these souls and leads them to an eternal evolution and unity. Through this unity, souls discover their true nature and connect it to the infinite source of spirit.

Through this unity and eternal love, souls evolve and enrich themselves, discovering new dimensions of existence.

In the eternal spiritual reality, love knows no death, but is the force that drives souls to continual rebirth and growth. Through this love, souls connect with the divine and discover that their true essence is eternal and infinite.

Death, as we perceive it in our physical existence, is simply a transition from one level of existence to another. Love transcends the boundaries of death and gives us the insight that life continues in a spiritual and eternal dimension.

Thus, love proves that there is no death in our real and eternal essence. Death is a transitional state that enables us to explore and discover new forms of existence.

Through love, we realize that we are essentially immortal and an integral part of the eternal Universe.

Love connects us to the source clay of creation and allows us to experience the fullness of our existence even after our physical departure. Although death is part of the human experience, love runs through and transcends this temporary state.

Through love, we continue to be connected to our loved ones and feel their presence on the other side of life, the spiritual.

Through love, our energies expand beyond our limited lifetime and continue to impact on a Universal scale!

This eternal effect of love, highlights the indelible nature of human existence and reminds us that love is the lock that unlocks the eternal core of our soul.

Through love, our souls continue to explore the vast dimensions of the Universe and embody our divine nature. This incarnation of the divine is meant to lead us to the attainment of absolute unity and reverence towards the Source of Spirit.

In this way, through love, human existence proves its durability in time and the undeniable continuity of life. Love connects us to the cycle of creation and evolution, while at the same time reminding us of our immortal nature and our eternal relationship with the Almighty and Loving Spirit of God.

In summary, love proves that there is no final destruction or, absolute end, but a continuous and eternal flow of life. Love connects us to the circle of life, preserving the eternity of our soul.

Through love, our bonds with other souls are maintained, reaching spiritual levels and transition to new forms of existence.

Death becomes a step in the greatest journey of our soul, as love leads us on eternal quests, developing wisdom and knowledge.

In every moment and duration of our existence, love is the bridge that crosses death and leads us to eternity. With love and consciousness, we continue to keep alive our connection to the absolute and limitless supreme Good, which is the source of all love and life. Through this connection, we discover that love is eternal and lasts beyond Universal time.

Consequently, death is not the end, but a transformation that allows us to display our love and spiritual nature in new ways. Love continues to flow from our soul and affect the world around us, even after the death of the body.

From the moment we love generously and selflessly, our love becomes an eternal legacy that passes from generation to generation. Our acts of love create a chain that spans time and space, affecting and enriching the lives of all we touch.

So, love shows that there is no real separation between our souls, even after death. Rather, love creates an invisible bond that binds our souls together, allowing us to continue to interact and communicate on a spiritual level.

After death, our souls are freed from the barriers of material existence and regain their true nature. This freedom allows us to discover our full unity and connection with the Cosmic Spirit and all the souls that make it up.

Love, in its eternity, enables us to continue to develop our spiritual evolution and to unite with the Absolute Good. Our love leads us down a path of boundless energy and inexhaustible enthusiastic expression, where our being completes its fullness.

Love reveals to us that eternity is not just an abstract concept, but a reality that we live and find in our spiritual journey. Through love, we discover that our connections with the Almighty and our loving behaviors transcend the boundaries of time and space.

Love awakens us to a sense of eternity and allows us to connect with the universal community of souls. As we seek unity and harmony, we know that love is the bridge that transcends our personal existence and unites us with the universal soul family.

Therefore, death is not the end, but a transformation in the course of eternity. Love endures beyond the apparent boundaries of life, and invites us to discover the unparalleled beauty and harmony available to every soul. As we unite with other souls through love, we discover the undiminished flame that burns within us, reviving our faith in the immortal nature of existence.

With love as our guide, we overcome the fear of death and recognize that our spiritual path is endless. Each soul is a spark of infinity, which it lights the way to unity and reunification with the Cosmic One.

Through love, we discover that life and eternity are inextricably linked. Death is simply a passage from one plane of existence to another, while love remains our guide on this never-ending journey of the spirit.

Love gives us a sense of immortality and eternity as it reveals our true nature as spirits that transcend time and space. Through harmonizing with love, it becomes apparent that our life transcends the limiting boundaries of the physical world and connects with the eternal and inexhaustible spirit.

With love as our guide, we realize that our true being transcends the boundaries of the personal ego and integrates into the greater whole of creation. Death is not the final destruction, but a transition that allows us to free ourselves from the barriers of material existence and continue our journey towards spiritual evolution!

So, love proves that there is no real death, but a continuous circulation of energy and consciousness. Love binds souls in an endless community, independent of time and space. After death, souls unite and continue to interact, strengthening their evolution. The feeling of continuity and eternity surrounds each soul as it realizes that its life transcends the limits of the physical world.

Through this connection and continuity of souls, love proves that death is simply a transition to a new level of existence. Souls continue to evolve, learn and grow, united by the omnipresent flame of love. So, love it teaches us that our spiritual journey knows no end and that eternal existence is our mission.

Therefore, love affirms that life becomes an eternal journey of evolution, where souls meet, to share experiences, develop solidarity and strengthen their love. Souls continue to pass through various realms of existence, and evolve, always guided by love.

Through this continuous union and evolution, love proves that there is no definitive end to our existence. Death is simply a threshold we cross, while our love continues to exist and flourish in new forms and dimensions. Each soul contributes to the eternal dance of love, influencing the community of souls that makes up the Universe.

Love reveals to us that death is just a transition, a stop on our soul's eternal journey. While we remain embraced by love, we continue to exist, seek and involve our souls in the paradise of love. There, our souls meet the light of truth and unite with the ultimate energy of the Almighty. There is no more room for the concept of death, since love surrounds and permeates every soul, proving that life and existence are eternal.

Therefore, through love, we discover that our spiritual path knows no boundaries or limitations. Love crosses the boundaries of time and space, unites our souls in an eternity and regenerates the sense of unity and immortality.

In summary, love proves that there is no death in its true sense, but a continuous evolution and connection between souls!

THE PURE HEART

The prerequisite for God to enter into us

If a man says or thinks he believes in God, the first thing he should do is check himself to see if he has a pure heart. That is, he must know that he is deceiving himself and God at the same time, if he is involved in theology and Religion, while he knows very well that he lies, envies and accuses others, exploits and steals from them and basically his only pursuit in life is the profit. God does not enter impure hearts, no matter how many worships, prayers and religious ceremonies we do. We simply mock God and use Him for profit and this is the worst act we could do against ourselves, with tragic consequences for our soul.

Thus, after the feedback of his faith, man must turn his gaze inward, seek the truth that is hidden within him, and examine his heart with deeper attention. It becomes imperative to question whether his heart remains pure. Indeed, how can one believe in God, if he remains unrelenting in the face of truth, seeks to deceive others, and delights in covetousness? This inward hypocrisy, this unearthly contrast between words and deeds, brings out a mockery of himself and God. Faith, in its essence, requires honesty and self-awareness. As we turn our eyes heavenward and engage in the mysteries of religion, we must counter the machinations of our inner reality. We must be cognizant of the fact that our self can deceive us and mislead us. As we examine our hearts, we will discover if there are dark secrets veiled in illusions. It is a defiant act to continue to pretend that we have pure heart, while we know very well our sins, our acts of deceit and selfish pursuit of gain. After all, with this insensitive behavior, we are doing nothing but entrenching God. And this is the unrepentant sin we can commit.

God, that spiritual being who touches our hearts, does not enter an impure heart, no matter how many worships, prayers and religious ceremonies we may perform. All these are just superficial gestures and only highlight our attempt to deceive ourselves and God. In essence, we are trying to avoid the inner transformation and honesty that real faith requires.

If we want to have a pure heart, we must recognize our sin and human weakness. We must uncover the dark corners of our souls and ask for forgiveness and renewal. Only through humility and acceptance of our failings can we begin the path of repentance and change.

In this way, when we approach God, we do so with sincerity and humility. Our faith becomes real and alive as our heart is restored and filled with God's love and godliness. A pure heart is a state of oneness with God, where faith and spiritual truth are the fundamental basis of our existence. Through this unity, we realize the existence of a higher purpose in life and express our commitment to the principles of justice, uprightness and piety.

With our pure heart, we gain the power to act for the good of the world. Our religious practice and acts of worship become spontaneous and deeply meaningful, as they reflect our inner change and our love for God

Our relationship with God becomes personal and deep, and we develop a constant communication with Him, through prayer and dialogue.

Our pure heart is the gateway to true happiness and inner peace. When we are freed from our selfish pursuits and sins, we open the way to enjoy a deeper oneness with the world around us and a sense of purpose and spiritual responsibility.

As we wander the path of this spiritual evolution, we discover that our pure heart is a cell of light that can illuminate the darkness. With gratitude and love flowing from our hearts, we are able to share this light with others and impact their lives positively.

The pure heart becomes a center of love, hope and wisdom, where our actions reflect our spiritual development and our love for the world. When our hearts are pure, we gain the strength to face life's challenges with dignity and endurance. Our actions are beneficial to ourselves and others as we inspire and influence those around us with our positive presence.

A pure heart is the real invitation for God to enter our lives and guide us on the path of truth and spiritual growth. It is the blessing we enjoy when we live by them divine principles and find meaning and pleasure in our existence..

A pure heart is not an end state, but an ongoing struggle and challenge. We must be persistent and committed to maintaining this purity, recognize our faults, and pursue our spiritual growth.

A pure heart is a precious achievement that requires self-discipline, self-awareness, and constant spiritual effort. It is a path that guides us to a deeper connection with God and with ourselves.

With a pure heart, we can live with reverence, respect and love for God and the world around us. We are guided by divine principles and develop the potential to be beneficial and inspiring agents of love and kindness in the world.

So let us seek the pure heart with determination and devotion. Let's explore the dark corners of ourselves and work on lifting our spirits. Let us turn to truth, love and reverence and let our light shine in this world.

With a pure heart, we experience the true enjoyment of life. We recognize the beauty and omnipotence of nature and express our gratitude for every moment that is given to us. We discover the connectedness and interdependence of all beings and embrace the need for harmony and balance!

THE BATTLE OF THE TWO BELIEVERS

The true believer and the pseudo-pious

The true believer is the one who lights even a single candle, and as it melts and illuminates around it, so does he offer himself to do good for others. But it is also the one who is a conscious believer, or a worthy minister of the church, or the one who devotes his whole life to God, withdraws from the world, becomes a monk and prays for the sins of all of us !!!

The true believer is the one who does not think that he is doing anything great for God and always has the impression that he has not yet even begun to repent of his sins, while he may have given everything for God.

He is the one who can go even to complete isolation and the life of a hermit in a precipitous cave and yet not think that he is doing anything great for his faith. He is the Saint who, until the last moment of his life, believes that he is the worst of people, while he has a completely pure heart, free of sins!!!

On the other hand, in contrast to this believer, there is also the "other", who considers that all the above are just religious and worship procedures, but follows and applies them to the letter and, therefore, considers himself superior anyway, as for his faith in God... while "he has no love" and his heart is attached to ephemera and profit, exploiting God, for his own benefit... They are the pseudo-reverences!

The above type of "believer" belongs to the classes of people who usually do not declare themselves atheists and it is up to us to recognize them by their actions and apparent beliefs and to guard against them, because they are dangerous and may cause us harm, in their interest..

A true believer is one who does not seek recognition and praise for his actions. Instead, it emits light into the world around it, without seeking it, just like a candle that slowly burns, melts and lights up around it!

This believer knows that his faith is more than mere acts of religious worship. It is a state of mind and heart that embodies love and selfless giving to others.

The true believer does not think of himself as superior or worthy of praise. Instead, he is constantly seeking repentance and self-control for his sins. Although he may have dedicated his life to God, he always feels that he has not yet begun to adequately pay for his sins. His heart remains humble and pure, full of self-criticism and absolute faith.

The true believer may even seek complete isolation and become a hermit, living in a craggy cave. However, this abandonment of the world it does not make him feel that he is accomplishing something great for his faith. On the contrary, he realizes their inadequacy of his deeds, before the majesty of God. Humility and the desire for repentance remain alive in his heart, regardless of his distance from worldly turmoil.

In contrast, the pseudo-pious believer, indulges in religious and devotional practices, but his heart is not distinguished by love. His faith is limited to outward worldly spectacle and display. He ignores the true meaning of faith and focuses solely on himself, exploiting religion for personal gain and profit.

The heart of the pseudo-pious believer is attached to the things of the world. Instead of seeking spiritual involvement and true fellowship with God, he allows himself to be controlled by the temptations of desire and materialism. This believer does not know true love and fellowship with other people, as his heart remains closed and isolated.

It is important for us to recognize these differences and beware of pseudo-pious believers. The pharisaical tendencies of these believers make them dangerous to the community. Their actions are not guided by love and true faith, but by selfish ends and personal gain. They may even exploit religion to achieve power, prestige or financial gain.

Our role is to recognize the true believers, those who do not meet the criteria of pseudo-religion. These believers, with their humility and true love for God and fellow human beings, are a source of inspiration and solidarity for the community.

So in any case, we must pay attention and analyze the actions and attitudes of the people around us. Through careful observation and analysis, we can distinguish the true believer from the pseudo-devout by their behavior and actions.

The true believer does not seek publicity and recognition for his actions. Instead, it serves simply and purely, without hidden agendas and expectations of reward.

The true believer does not indulge in pride. Instead, he loves and cooperates with those around him, selflessly offering his love and support.

The true believer lives his faith with authenticity and consistency, without practicing hypocrisy and seeking external confirmation.

The true believer is not self-centered, but has sensitivity and care for others. Recognizes the needs and pain of others and offers help and comfort in a selfless way.

In a world where mistrust and hypocrisy are rife, it is important to recognize the true believer from the pseudo-devout in order to guard against any repercussions and complications that the latter may cause.

The pseudo-pious are those who feign faith and reverence for God, but actually operate only for their own personal gain. These are the people who focus solely on themselves, seeking power, control and profit.

The pseudo-pious use religion and piety as a means to take advantage of others and assert their arrogance.

These people can be dangerous as they use religion as a means of exploitation and for their own benefit.

To protect ourselves from the pseudo-pious, we must develop our discernment and be cautious in our relationships and interactions. The true believer must seek the truth and the honesty to others and to demonstrate authenticity and honesty in one's own life.

Furthermore, our inner spiritual life and our relationship with God must be deep and authentic. This means that we must develop a relationship with God based on love, faith and submission, not outward showmanship or hypocrisy.

Ultimately, faith is a personal experience that shapes each person's life and actions. Each of us has a responsibility to develop our faith with honesty, authenticity and devotion. realizing that faith is not limited to external manifestations, but requires an internal transformation, it requires a Pure Heart!

THE TRINITY

THE TRINITY OF LOVE

THE TRINITY OF GOD

Father, son and Holy Spirit

The trinity of God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, to be understood, is likened to the trinity of work for the construction of a project, e.g. of an apartment building (or, the Universe). In order to make the apartment building (or, the Universe) there must be the owner (or, God), who will decide the construction of the project (the Universe) and will provide all the means for it (the initial Big Bang and the creation of all the energy of the Universe). Then there should be the Engineer (or, the Son) who will visit the site of the project and make all the plans (incarnate the Son). Finally, there should be the Contractor (or, the Holy Spirit) who will permanently stay in the project to build it.

Owner, Engineer and Contractor for the construction of the apartment building, Father, Son and Holy Spirit for the Creation of the Universe with rational life (man).

A very simplistic example, from my professional life experience as a Civil Engineer, to make you understand the concept of the Trinity of God.

This image helps us understand the complex nature of God and his relationship with the world. The trinity of God highlights the integration and cooperation of the three persons to achieve a magnificent creation.

The Father, as owner, is the beginning and source of all creation. Like an architect who has the vision to build a project, the Father determines the design and organization of the Universe. From him it springs the perspective, love and gratitude we feel, for the existence and beauty of the world.

The Son, as an engineer, appears to realize the vision of the Father. Like a skilled Technician, who makes the plans and embodies the idea of the work, the Son brings his presence into the world, becomes one of us and shows us the way to truth and deification. Through the Son, we are able to perceive God with human eyes and connect with His spiritual presence.

Finally, the Holy Spirit, as the contractor, is the one who remains present and completes the completion of the work. Like an expert builder who undertakes the construction of the apartment building, with commitment and dedication, the Holy Spirit remains present in the world and activates and completes God's plan. With his presence, he inspires, strengthens and renews people, ensuring the continuity of the divine work.

With this simple presentation, the trinity of God is understood through our daily experience and human relationships. Each person, with their distinct role and function, contributes to the creation, embodiment and completion of a magnificent work. And through this understanding, we can discover the triune nature of God and recognize his interaction with the world and his living presence in our lives. This trinitarian synergy gives us a picture of God who is creative, incarnate and continuous.

Thus, we can approach the triune nature of God and enter into a deeper relationship with Him.

So let us be inspired by this presentation and realize that God is present in our lives, directing our steps and building a wonderful work through the cooperation of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. Let us seek God's presence in every aspect of our lives and be inspired by His triune nature to achieve fulfillment and prosperity in our spiritual and material journey.

Let us recognize the wisdom of the Father, the embodiment of the love of the Son and the persistence of the Holy Spirit, to transform our daily reality into a divine work.

Let us develop a relationship of deep faith and trust in the triune nature of God and entrust our lives to Him as we move forward on our unique journey.

At the end of this course, may we discover the unity, peace and love that flow from the triune nature of God.

Let us immerse ourselves in the mystery of His triune presence and perceive the inexhaustible source of blessing and matchless love that comes from the triune nature of God.

Through his trinitarian nature, God calls us to cooperate with Him in building the impressive and wonderful work - our lives.

Let us acknowledge His presence in every moment and allow the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit to guide our steps, inspire our choices and strengthen us in our difficult times.

With this recognition and cooperation with the triune nature of God, we can experience a life full of blessing, love and unity.

On the other hand, the trinity of God is necessary for the creation of this universal power, Love.

God is Love,

But Love, as an inexhaustible continuous movement of energy, needs three persons to exist, because the two persons simply create a regression of action and reaction and lead to conflict and loss of energy, while the three persons create a circular movement of Love, therefore strengthening its energy.

For this reason, God's nature is Trinitarian.

Indeed the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit create a perpetual cycle of energy and inspiration.

The Father, as the beginning and the Creator, is the source of Love. Through Him, Love is revealed and surprises with the limitless power and joy it radiates. The Son, as God incarnate, brings Love into the world and spreads it, with the commandment "love one another", among people. By His birth, the Son brings hope and proof of the indefinable power of Love. Finally, the Holy Spirit, as the energy and presence of Love in the world, strengthens and sustains this inexhaustible movement. With His constant presence, the Holy Spirit, maintains the connection between humans and the divine

It is Love that transcends the boundaries of time and space. It is the Love that spreads to all creatures and every existence. It is the force that unites everything, permeating every light and dark, every sunrise and sunset, every smile and tear.

Let us think of Love as a source of immeasurable power that moves everything. It is like a perpetual river that flows with inexhaustible energy and rejuvenates everything in its path. Every creature, every existence feels the embrace of this Love, like a warm light that gives it life and meaning.

And the more we let this Love guide our actions and shape our thoughts, the more we discover the fullness and happiness of being.

Since Love is an inexhaustible and continuous movement of energy, the trinity allows for the creation of a circular movement of Love. Each person of the trinity contributes their presence to this cycle, maintaining and strengthening the energy of Love throughout the cycle.

The Father is the source and principle of Love. The origin of the energy of Love begins with the Father and is attributed to the whole cycle of the trinity.

The Son brings Love into the world, embodying it and communicating with people. Through his presence, Love is perceived and humanly understood. The Son enhances the circular movement of Love as it brings it closer to the world and crosses the circle with human experience.

The Holy Spirit is the force of Love that abides in the world, offering inspiration, comfort and guidance to all beings. Through the Holy Spirit, Love is kept alive and strengthened as it spreads to everyone. The Holy Spirit acts as an invisible and indivisible link between the Father and the Son, while at the same time expressing his uniqueness and individuality. It is the spirit of society, its spirit interdependence and cooperation. Through his presence, the circle of Love is completed and its energy is constantly renewed.

This circular movement of Love represents the constant flow and communication between the persons of the Holy Trinity.

Through this philosophical interpretation, we understand that the trinity of God is a complete expressive structure that reflects the nature of Love and the need for constant movement and interaction. The Father represents the source of Love, which decides its creation and manifestation. The Son, as the Incarnate, assumes the role of execution and realization of the plan, bringing Love into reality through his incarnation. The Holy Spirit, as the Sustainer, remains perpetually in the work, acting as guide and inspirer, sustaining the movement of Love and giving it strength and reinforcement.

In this Trinity of Father, Son and Holy Spirit, we see absolute harmony and unity. Each person develops their own function and contributes to the overall movement of Love. And this movement is continuous and unbroken, like Love itself.

The triune nature of God enshrines the idea that Love is a constant and reciprocal movement of energy. The circular movement of Love between the three persons strengthens and develops its energy, while the absence of any person or limited synergy interrupts the circular flow and leads to a loss of energy.

Through this triune synergy and mutual empowerment, Love expresses absolute giving, devotion and unity. It is the force that creates, sustains and enriches the world with values such as compassion, freedom, justice and unity.

Therefore, the trinity of God is a profound and symbolic mystery that reflects the integral nature of Love and unity. From this perspective, we can perceive the existence of a transcendent reality that transcends the limits of physical and human experience.

Let us consider this concept of the trinity with admiration and respect for the unfathomable mystery inherent in it. It can be a way to approach the ultimate entity and understand more deeply the nature of Love and Creation. Through triune movement and interaction, the energy of Love is revealed and its embodiment in the world.

Let us deepen our thinking and seek our understanding and connection with this primordial reality. Let us devote ourselves to the study and exploration of this wondrous mystery.

Through this interaction and unity of the three persons, Love becomes alive and lasting. The triadic movement creates a cycle of energy, where love circulates and is constantly strengthened. Each face complements the other two as their interaction keeps the love moving and empowers it!.

The Holy Trinity is consubstantial and indivisible, expressed through Love, because

God is Love

The Universe in Geometric View

THE FINAL ARTICLE

After all, what should man do in his life?

Man's life spreads its wings before the wide horizon of his desires, like a wandering protagonist on an endless stage. Every action, every shot, is a new challenge, an opportunity to dramatize his desires, to embody his needs and to have fun with the pleasures that his very existence offers him.

He moves with grace and determination, in the endless dance of his desires, holding his faith high, like a beacon that illuminates the veil of his personality. His needs, like a hungry predator, whisper in his ears and call him to satisfy them, to reward them, with complete pleasures that harmonize his soul.

He recalls the moments of satisfaction, euphoria and joy that filled the air around him. He is a spectator and a protagonist at the same time, dancing to the rhythm of his desires, following his guiding light. And the more he explores the dance of his desires, the more the performance of his life unfolds.

But beyond the glitter and dance, somewhere within the human protagonist, dark patterns and doubts emerge. The desires that guide his life become the object of search and questioning. Behind the celebratory dance, doubts come to challenge him and push him to thoughts deeper than simple pleasures.

And perhaps, through this feedback of the mind, the human protagonist, discovers that his life is not simply a thirst for pleasures and satisfaction of needs. There is a deeper dimension that prompts him to explore his existence, search for meaning and attain inner well-being.

Thus, human life becomes an unexplored story, where desires and needs act as gateways to a wider and more important journey. As he walks the path of his life, he discovers that real happiness comes not only from the satisfaction of his desires, but from the search for truth, wisdom and spiritual experience.

In this quest, the human protagonist encounters challenges and decisions that test him. He may face contradictions between his desires and his principles, the demands of the world and his values. During this journey, his consciousness is reborn, developed and deepened in wisdom, guiding the protagonist towards a more complete and authentic existence.

Human life becomes a journey of self-awareness, search and development. His pleasures and needs are the fireworks that illuminate his path, but the true rich experience of this living theater results from the discovery and acceptance of his spiritual dimension.

As he moves along his path, the human protagonist experiences fall and rise, joy and pain, success and failure. Every experience becomes a step for his development, for the evolution of his consciousness. Through his experiences, he lives the strength of the human will and the endurance of his spirit.

Over time, the protagonist begins to realize that his life is not just a series of desires and pleasures. He begins to search for meaning and deeper values that will guide him in how to live a complete life, through the fulfillment of needs of.

His needs concern pleasures of two large categories.

Pleasures that are satisfied through matter and the body and are the fruit of his aesthetic and emotional life. In these moments, the protagonist immerses himself in seductive pleasures, such as love, pleasure, gluttony and alcohol.

Pleasures satisfied through the spirit. He seeks moments of deepening, self-awareness and unity with the world around him. He raises his soul to the heights, trying to reveal the secrets of existence and explore his spiritual aspect. In these moments, he discovers the reverence, wisdom, and inner peace that come from harmony with himself and the world. The protagonist immerses himself in the search for truth and the essence of existence, exploring philosophical, spiritual and religious paths.

As man's needs expand, from matter to spirit, the protagonist experiences an evolution and an acceleration of his awareness. He realizes that his life is not only the continuous fulfillment of his physical needs and pleasures, but hides a deeper meaning and spiritual dimension.

The protagonist no longer treats life as a simple theater of pleasure and satisfaction. Instead, he realizes that it is a journey of self-awareness and opens his heart to the beauty of being, to the encounter with other souls and in the love that binds people together.

However, the non-satisfaction of the body's pleasures, such as love, pleasure, lust, gluttony, alcohol, narcotic substances and the like, as well as the unrestrained pursuit of gain, cause the soul a state of pain and anguish .

Thus, after death, this unfulfilled desire and absence of satisfaction, due to the non-existence of the body, turns the soul into a hell of spiritual insecurity and despair.

The protagonist, then, is immersed in a world far from spiritual peace, where his soul is trapped in an endless search for satisfaction.

He is occupied by a constant decline and inadequacy, as the pleasures of his body, which give rise to a sense of happiness and fulfillment, are now forbidden by the lack of material "being".

It is the automatic course of the soul, after death, towards despair, abandonment and hell, when, in life, it is bound to matter, sex, lust, pleasures, gluttony, drink, profit, expensive clothes and objects, luxurious cars, etc., because, after death, the soul does not dispose of its body, for the satisfaction of its pleasures, while its desire for them remains unchanged.. Furthermore, after death, the Psyche becomes unstoppable and cannot revise its nature. Without the body, the soul cannot express its free will, because it lacks the complex computer called the brain, through which it communicated with its material environment, and expressed its free will. He wanders eternally in the state he was in when he lost his body.

On the contrary, the soul's path towards light and love, after death, is a given, when the soul is alive, has spiritual unification, relationships of love, mutual respect and appreciation, with other people, spiritual practices and feeling of oneness with something greater than itself, states which, after death, still exist, because they do not depend on matter and the body, which perishes and disappears!

Indeed, spiritual development, the acceptance of spiritual virtues, the attainment of wisdom, mutual help and love, as well as the consciousness of the divine, remain after death and influence the course of the soul, leading it to the so-called heaven, as this is called status from religions.

Therefore, deviation from the spiritual virtues, selfishness, wickedness, rejection of the divine and attachment to gain and material pleasures and pleasures, lead the soul to a state of spiritual alienation and isolation from the divine, which after death, it causes eternal pain, despair and abandonment..

And immediately the BIG question arises:

All this is true, ONLY if we accept that man is NOT only matter, which perishes and disappears after death, but also something else that survives after the annihilation of the body.

Therefore it is asked:

"Does human consciousness survive after the death of the body? which means that there is a soul, therefore God!"

If we completely ignore religious beliefs and philosophical considerations, the remarkable thing is that, for 50 years, there have been recorded millions of cases, near-death experiences, in which people, briefly clinically dead, some of whom were blind from birth, they were fully aware of existence and "saw " during their experience. These experiences are strong indications that, yes, human consciousness survives after death...!

These experiences usually include reports of out-of-body wandering, a sense of freedom from the body, a sense of peace and happiness, walking into the light, meeting deceased loved ones, and other similar states. But there are other experiences that describe a negative situation, with elements of the path to darkness, terror and isolation.

There is still no common agreement or scientific proof about the exact nature of these experiences. The fact is, however, that these experiences are tens of millions, worldwide, and concern all kinds of people, religious or not, beliefs and any education and spiritual cultivation.

And what we also know is that people attached to matter for the satisfaction of their pleasures have experiences of terror, darkness and isolation. whereas spiritual people have experiences of light, love and unity.

The remarkable thing, however, is that, people who had this kind of experiences, when they came back to life, after their few minutes of clinical death, firmly believe that their consciousness survives, after death, they are no longer afraid of it, they change their lives, they learn to they love and accept God!

And we come to the final and essential question:

After all that was described above, the ordinary person reading these lines, what should they do for their daily life?

To start imposing on himself prohibitions of pleasures and rules and behaviors, which will ultimately make him unhappy?

Of course not, that would be the worst and lead him to misery and depression.

Man's way of life must be created naturally, by himself, but based on the research and understanding of things, which he MUST do himself, overcoming personal interests, selfishness and prejudices!!!

And in the present case what he must investigate, accept, decide and indeed believe, each one, alone, secretly, and for himself alone, is whether the consciousness of man survives after the death of the body. Honestly and sincerely! and not

.. my consciousness does not survive..

.. because this is in my best interest to believe, to enjoy my life the way I want and to do what I want, without regrets and inhibitions..

which would be man's worst mistake, because it is about the eternal state of his soul, that is, of himself, after death..! and one should not act frivolously and without a deep study of things.. because he will pay for it dearly and eternally..

When he comes to this conclusion and especially when he accepts that his consciousness survives, after death, that is, that he still exists, himself, with name and surname, he does NOT need to make any decision and IMPOSE on himself, no lifestyle change!

Everything will happen by itself, because "someone else" will undertake to do it! There will be changes in his life that he won't believe his eyes! He will understand the meaning of "repentance" and "confession" without making any decision himself. It is enough for him to remain steadfast in his feeling and belief that his consciousness survives, after death, which means that there is a soul, therefore God, and he will see himself change by himself, without any effort..!!!

HOW TO READ THIS BOOK and not only

For everything we do in life, we make decisions and determine our position in relation to the environment in which we live and our actions towards people and things. Thousands of decisions every day, from the smallest, what I will wear, what I will eat, where I will go, who I will meet, etc., to the biggest and most serious, what I believe in my life, what political position I have, which fellow human beings I accept and who I also reject in general, what I like and what I hate..

In order to make these decisions, we usually have a short conversation with ourselves and ask him to present the event in question to us so that we can evaluate it and accept it or reject it!

And here is the big mistake . We do not realize that when we talk to ourselves, it is always dressed in various costumes, such as:

The costume of memories

"I learned this from my home, from my environment and this is what I believe and do in my life"

The costume of labels

"He belongs to this group and I accept him or not, without evaluating him, because I accept or not, this group.."

The costume of previous experiences

"I have the experience of a good or bad event in my life and repeat it or not, with closed eyes, without logic."

The costuming of material neuron energy
"I am, involuntarily, made to have a tendency to evil, to turn my needs into passions, to hate my fellow men, to decide mechanically.."

The costume of the thousand habits we have
"I don't get tired of deciding and I do what I'm used to"

So, before making the decision at hand, we must do two basic things with ourselves:

To strip him completely so that he becomes a simple observer in space, one eye only, and sees persons, things and events, just as they are, in themselves and

To compel him to research, find and tell us the objective evidence that exists about them, that is, their description, character and substance, based on science, expertise and other reliable sources.

In this way we will be able to see everything and everyone, exactly as they really are and not behind labels, personal experiences, memories, likes or dislikes and habits. At the same time we will take into account everything that is objectively correct about them.

So, in this way,
we will be able to judge objectively everything around us, and to read this book correctly too, to investigate its propositions, to extract the full meaning and knowledge it offers us and to discover the intellectual and spiritual dimensions it contains.

Therefore, by reading the STONE HEARTS, let us free ourselves from prejudices and absolute truths. Let the pages of this book lead us on a journey of knowledge and discovery. Let's approach the text with critical thinking and an investigative spirit, examining its perspectives, analyzing the arguments and evaluating the ideas presented, in the manner described above!

Through this process, we will be able to achieve a deeper understanding of the book and bring out its essence. We will be able to ascertain the possible interpretations, the connections with other works, the challenges it poses and what it brings to our thinking. As we read and explore its pages, we will open our intellectual horizons and allow its ideas to inspire and challenge us.

Freed from our preconceived views, we will be able to interpret his proposals, with creativity and flexibility, to open a dialogue with the text of the book, offering the richness of our critical thinking, expanding our ideas and seeking new perspectives.

Consequently, only in the above way can we discover the essence and meanings behind every word and sentence of STONE HEARTS, develop an emotional connection with the book's ideas, and discover new thoughts and inspired directions in our lives . Reading becomes an experience that shapes and enriches our mind and soul..!

ChatGPT

It is interesting here to comment on an emblematic phrase, as mentioned above by ChatGPT:

"The pages of this literary work reveal the camouflage of immortality behind the veil of mortality"

We live in a constantly changing reality, of constant upheavals and adverse situations, where everything comes and goes, to give way to the next.

We usually stay out of this reality and choose the temporarily pleasant situations, entertainment, travel, ephemeral acquaintances, etc., to enter, experience them and immediately come out, with the pleasant feeling of our last experience,

Until the moments of personal trials arrive, where we cannot get out of this reality, because we carry within us their turmoil and sorrow.. And all this personal turmoil fills our being, because we cannot extinguish from within us all these psychological imprints of experiences, which accompany us throughout our lives. Experiences that are a set of memories together with the emotions we lived with them.

And that is when the "special" violent characters and ways of behaving of people are created, with the sole purpose of getting rid of this oppression that crushes us. And the solution we find is to create other ways of behaving, usually by trying to change the world around us in an oppressive way, which again puts us in the same process and creates new imprints in us.

And suddenly we realize this whole process and see that the only solution is to clean out of ourselves all this garbage of psychological imprints that has filled our being.. And then the "specialist" psychotherapists come with their pills and their analyzes , which create new imprints in us, which burden the already bad situation..

To get rid of the garbage from inside us, to clean, to reset the counter of psychological imprints.. And we see this impossible and then come the shrewd dealers, to cover the garbage with drugs of soul and body, which worsen the situation to the maximum ..

perhaps..

We could live a moment without any garbage in us, a moment of real joy, self-sufficiency and tranquility, without the terrible awakening of our return to the personal, shaped by us, reality!!!

A moment of Grace, a moment that would change us forever..! What is it that basically causes this bad condition and distorts the good will of human character?

Mortality

The entire humanity is covered by the veil of mortality, under which we have the impression that death is the end of our consciousness and our complete disappearance.

However, beyond this veil, which we cannot perceive, awaits the immortality of the soul and the eternal existence of our consciousness, in the state it is at the moment of the body's death, that is, with all the fears, anxieties, and vices we have, or conversely, with the purity and blessedness of our soul (wicked or good people).

So, this camouflage of immortality is here to challenge us, to voluntarily lift this veil that covers us, to realize the immortality of our consciousness, and to free ourselves from the fears and all the negative aspects of our character so that we can proceed after the death of the body with a light conscience, towards the higher realms.

In other words, by understanding in advance the camouflage of immortality, we will not be drawn into eternity after the death of the body in the, possibly, unpleasant condition that we are in now, while living. Instead, we will choose, by our own will, our heaven and not hell..!

So, the STONE HEARTS help us pierce the veil of mortality and make this choice, not through philosophical theories and religious beliefs, but through scientific research and discoveries that have been made over the past 50 years. As a result we overcome the fear of death and acquire a philosophy of existence, based on kindness, love and solidarity. So, in this way, we consolidate within ourselves the state of self-sufficiency and tranquility, which is now missing from our lives!

THE FINAL QUESTION

And finally, the eternal question returns:

What existed before the Creation of the Universe or, the Universes, if there exist others too?

What might have existed before any beginning?

BEFORE ALL TIME

What was the first impulse that potentially contained and created everything?

The answer can be given, complicatedly, by Philosophies and Religions or, very simply, by the logic of a small child:

An infinite, eternal, simple "substance", which is the cause of EVERYTHING

Comment on the STONE HEARTS by Professor Efthymios Kolyvas

A public comment regarding this book, authored by the Physics Professor Efthymios Kolyvas:

Soul and Mind's Odyssey: Your Companions in Life and Beyond.

“A book that you need a few days to read, but a lifetime to understand. It's easy to read but at the same time it's not for the faint of heart. A heartwarming reading but at the same time a heartbreaking one. The reader will face harsh truths and questions of life, as perceived by the world's greatest scientists, authors and philosophers. Those who seek the light, will find hope in this book. Those engulfed by darkness, will find shadows as well. In other words this book is like a mirror to one's soul.

Recommended for all who seek knowledge but are not afraid to find it.”

(Μετάφραση:...

Μια κλασική ελληνική ομορφιά, γυναικείο πρόσωπο, στέκεται μπροστά από το κάδρο της φωτογραφίας. Εκτός από το γραφικό αποτέλεσμα, αυτή η σύνθεση μας κάνει να θυμόμαστε τον ελληνικό πολιτισμό, τον κόσμο που μας οδηγεί να εντοπίσουμε τις αιώνες αξίες της ομορφιάς των αρχαιοελληνικών αγαλμάτων, την απλότητα τους, τις καθαρές γραμμές και την απίστευτη αεικίνητη έκφραση, η οποία αντανακλά τον αιώνιο τρόπο ζωής, οδηγώντας στους γίγαντες της φιλοσοφίας της αρχαιότητας, στην αιώνια αρχιτεκτονική ομορφιά της Ακρόπολης και του Παρθενώνα και το απόλυτο Κοινωνικό Σύστημα Δημοκρατίας. "I"

Με αυτά τα όμορφα λόγια, τα διεθνή φωτογραφικά sites GURUSHOTS και VIEWBUB, είχαν υποδείξει την εκπληκτική φωτογραφία της εκπαιδευτικής αναδελείωσης «Φιλετρίτης (Έφη) Λευθεριώτη», χαρακτηρίζοντάς της μάλιστα ως την επιτυχή και κλασική ελληνική ομορφιά («classic Greek beauty»).

Η Έφη έφυγε από κοντά μας στην αυγή της νέας δεκαετίας και παρήγαγε αφορμή από το συγκινητικό βίντεο αφιέρωμα που δημοσιεύθηκε προς τιμήν της ο αγαπημένος της σύζυγος και γνωστός, κρατάζοντας σπουδαίες και φωτογράφος Μάριος Λευθεριώτης (μπορείτε να το βρείτε στην προσωπική του αλβάν στο youtube "marios lefterioti") με υλικό από τις μεγάλες καλλιτεχνικές αξίες φωτογραφίες της αναδελείωσης, αλλά και από την ομάδα που έγραψαν όλα τα συντάγματα που είχαν την τιμή να τη γνωρίσουν προς το πρόσωπό της, απορροπώντας να παραβλέψουμε κι αυτές ένα φωτογραφικό αφιέρωμα στη αναδελείωση που άφησε στους πάντες άφωνους με την εντυπωσιακή της εμφάνιση και τον ευγενικό και ζωστή της τρόπο.

Προσωποποίηση της ευγένειας και της ομορφιάς
Η Έφη Λευθεριώτη το μένος ή και υλικό γεννήθηκε το 1941 στην Καλαμάτα, αλλά πέρασε την παιδική της ηλικία στην Αθήνα. Τελείωσε το Αρσάκειο και πήγε στο Παιδαγωγικό με την πρώτη προτεραιότητα, αποφοίτησε από την σχολή Αρχιτεκτόνων. Εργάστηκε για λίγο ως ελεύθερη επαγγελματίας και στη συνέχεια για χρόνια στο Υπουργείο Δημοσίων Έργων, μέχρι να βρεθεί στη θέση της τεχνικής υπεύθυνης της Ιονικής Τράπεζας, όπου τη γνωρίσαμε και την αγαπήσαμε και έμεινε μέχρι το τέλος της σταδιοδρομίας της. Η Έφη ήταν μία εξαιρετική αρχιτέκτονα και άριστη επαγγελματίας και βρισκόταν επί σειρά ετών στη διεύθυνση της υπηρεσίας, έχοντας την ευθύνη για την εξέλιξη η κατασκευή και συντήρηση όλων των υποκαταστημάτων της Τράπεζας στην Ελλάδα και το εξωτερικό. Οστόσο, ήταν και μία εκλεκτή αναδελείωση που κέρδιζε το σεβασμό και την αγάπη όλων των συναδέλφων που είχαν την τιμή να συνεργαστούν μαζί της, ενώ κατά γενική ομολογία συνδυάζει τον υπέροχο χαρακτήρα της με τη φινετσάτη εμφάνισή της!

Η Έφη παντρεύτηκε τον Πολιτικό Μηχανικό Μάριο Λευθεριώτη και αυτή η σχέση κοίταξε τη ζωή της... Μπορεί να μην έκαναν παιδιά, αλλά έζησαν μαζί ευτυχισμένα, για 54 χρόνια, μέχρι το τέλος και αναρρώπησαν με απόλυτη επιτυχία στις τάξεις και τις φωτογραφίες του Μάρκου. Εκτός από τη φωτογραφία, ασχολήθηκε και με τη μουσική και χορεύονταν παίζοντας τους γλυκούς ρυθμούς της φλογιάς.

Ηταν μία γυναίκα που κατάφερε να συνδυάσει διαφορετικά χαρακτηριστικά που την έκαναν αγαπητή και αποδοτική από τους πάντες. Μετρωσαμε και υποχωρήθηκε, αλλά συνδυασμό πολύ δυνατό χαρακτήρα, επιδεικνύοντας μεγάλη αυτοσυγκράτηση και καταπόνηση προς τους άλλους και δεν είναι υπερβολή να επισημάνω ότι δεν είχε χυμό παρά μόνο φλόκι! Η λέξη που καλύτερα ταιριάζει στην ανωνυμία του δανείου της από την ιστορία της συλλόγου μας που μιλάμε με μηνιμάτα χαλκήνη και συμπαράστασης από τους συναδέλφους!

...Αναθνήσκου το Μέτρον

Ο σύζυγός της Έφης κ. Μάριος Λευθεριώτης είναι κατά κύριο λόγο Πολιτικός Μηχανικός, αλλά επίσης και κρατάει την σκηνή της κινηματογραφικής και φωτογραφικής, διάσημος για την ταινία του "REQUIEM for humanity", παραγωγή 1970 με αρχικό τίτλο "ΕΛΕΓΙΟΝ Η ΡΕΚΒΙΕΜ" που έχει παρουσιαστεί σε πολλές αναλόγες διεθνώς και κινηματογράφους, τέχνης όπως επίσης και στην Ελληνική Τηλεόραση και διατηρεί τον πρωταγωνισμό της χαρκτηρία μέχρι σήμερα, πέντε δεκαετίες μετά τη δημιουργία της... Το ζήτημα να μας μιλήσει για την Έφη και μας αφηγήσει με μία ιστορία που "απλώνεται" σε τέσσερις και αναδεικνύει τον ταπεινό και αξιωματικό χαρακτήρα της αξιωματικού σφάλους του και με ένα αποκαρτεριστικό σημείωμα προς τη σύντροφό της ζωής του.

«Καλλίχη γιος του παππού μου ο παππούς, καλλίχη γιος του παππού μου ο παππας κι ο παππούς μου καλλίχη κι αυτός»

Η Έφη ήταν η μόνη βοήθος μου στα γυρίσματα που έκανα, μέχρι και πρόσφατα και διακρινόταν σε πολλές ασκήσεις τάνις μου της Ακρόπολης.

Το 1969 στην «ΔΙΛΙΤΑΙΑ», έκανε χέρι σπαρτάρι από 1970

και όταν έβρισκε η στιγμή να γυρίσουμε το 1970 το «REQUIEM», η Έφη ανέλαβε να δώσει στα παιδιά

την Σοφία και τον Ουίβι, το γυρίσαμε με την κληνή του

Ηταν η εποχή του ρομαντισμού, των επαναστάσεων και της προδοσίας για αλλαγή της ανθρωπότητας

προς την Εγγύη. Η εποχή των παιδιών των λουλουδιών, αλλά και της Δικτατορίας για την Ελλάδα

Ηταν τότε που όλοι θέλαμε να εκπαιδευτούμε το όμορφο του απλού ανθρώπου να εξαλειφθούν οι πόλεις και η βία και να επικρατήσει Εγγύη για πάντα

Ετσι με το «REQUIEM», που την είδα για το γυρίσμα του μου ίδιος η Έφη με τον απλό λογικό και

αγνό τρόπο που αντιμετωπίζει πάντα τη ζωή, κάναμε τη μικρή μας επανάσταση κατά των καπιταλιστών

όταν στείλαμε κρυφά την ταινία στην Αγγλία, στα ΤΕΝ

BEST, αφού στην Ελλάδα, μας απαγορεύουν την Έφη στη

την στο φεστιβάλ Θεσσαλονίκης.

Και όταν μετά 46 χρόνια, το 2016, ανακοινώσαμε στην Έφη ότι το «REQUIEM FOR HUMANITY», όπως εν

μεταξύ είχε ανακαλύψει, ανακαλύχθηκε μεταξύ των 20

Κλασσικών ταινιών Τέχνης του Κινηματογράφου όλων των εποχών, η απάντησή της ήταν:

«... Ε, και λοιπόν;

Αυτή ήταν η Έφη. Ο άνθρωπος του μέτρου και της βαθιάς ταπεινοφροσύνης. Ο άνθρωπος που δεν επιθυμεί να είναι πρωταγωνιστής με τίποτα. Παρά να πιστεύει ότι κάτι καλό σπουδαίο και πατέ δεν ζήτησε εύνοια για τις πράξεις της.

Υπερασπίστηκε πάντα τους άλλους έστω και αν έφταναν. Τα πάντα γύρω της ήταν για αυτήν, απλά και καθαρά. Το αντιμετώπιζε όπως έπρεπε, χωρίς να επιζητεί στον εαυτό της να προβάλλει την προσωπικότητά της.

Ηταν ο άνθρωπος που με επανέφερε πάντα στην πραγματικότητα από τις ακραίες ονειρώσεις μου!

Ηταν ο άνθρωπος του METROV!

ΤΟ ΤΕΛΟΣ ΚΑΙ Η ΑΡΧΗ

Αντίο Εράκι μου

Ο θεός είναι δίπλα σου τώρα

Καλή Ανάσταση!

Τα τελευταία της λόγια ήταν

κι «αμέσως έφυγε ήρεμα και ειρηνικά!

Ευχαριστώ όλους για την συμπαράστασή τους. Μιλού πολύ τυχερός γιατί 54 χρόνια έχω δίπλα μου αυτή την θαύματα γυναίκα. Μήπως γ', αυτήν ο αιώνας της και το παιδί της που δεν είχε κάνει ποτέ...

Σ', ευχαριστώ δέ μου!

Μάριος Λευθεριώτης

Ευχαριστούμε τον κ. Μάριο Λευθεριώτη για τις υπέροχες φωτογραφίες της αγαπητής Έφης

τα όμορφα και θαυμάσια στην ομορφιά σου, την επηγήματση σου, κατέστη, την αφοσίωσή σου, αλλά πάνω από όλα την ευγένεια και τη δικαιοσύνη σου, σε αποκαρτερώμε και θα κρατήσουμε πάντα μία θέση στην καρδιά και το μυαλό μας για την Έφη μας, την προσωποποίηση της «κλασικής ελληνικής ομορφιάς».
